Dutch Belted Cattle Make Comeback On Rotational Grazing Farms

The Dutch Belted "cookie" calf is shown by children of Roman and Lucy Stoltzfoos, Gap Road, Lancaster County. After appearing on The American Livestock Breeds Conservancy's critical list, the Dutch Belted cattle breed is making a comeback because these animals adapt quite readily to rotational grazing programs. Showing the calf is from left, Josh, 4; Charlene, 8; Clifford, 6; Delmar, 10; and Caleb, 2.

EPHRATA (Lancaster Co.) — When you hear a dairyman, especially a grassland farmer, affectionately talk about his Oreo cookies, he may not be talking about a famous registered name snack that has white cream sandwiched between two chocolate cakes and is eaten with milk. The grasslander's Oreo cookies most likely have four legs, a head and tail, and are expected to give the milk that is eaten with cookies.

With the surge in input and overhead costs in the dairy operation, farmers are turning to less costly ways of doing things. The method of choice that has emerged is called rotational grazing. Since the cow has a front end chopper and a rear end manure spreader, she can do the harvesting and fertilizing in one operation while supplying milk and meat to provide a living for the farmer.

The genetics bred into today's cows made them adaptable to the mechanized, high grain feeding programs in confinement operations. These cows produce lots of milk at a very young age to cover the increasing costs of the operation. A never ending treadmill of higher and higher production taking higher and higher inputs puts more and more stress on the feeding program and the cow.

Environmentalism and animal rights notwithstanding, economics has turned the minds and farming operations of many dairymen back to a less industralized program. And with this new emphasis on economy rather than production, a new kind of cow is emerging. A cow that can and will walk the pas-

Carl Shaffer Elected Vice President Of Farm Bureau

CAMP HILL (Cumberland Co.) — Carl Shaffer of Mifflinville, Columbia County, has been elected vice president of the Pennsylvania Farm Bureau (PFB). Shaffer was elected during a meeting of the PFB State Board of Directors. He was one of four candidates for the position.

The election was held to fill a vacancy created by the succession of former vice president Guy Donaldson to the office of PFB president. Former president Keith Eckel resigned April 1. Both Donaldson and Shaffer will stand for re-election during PFB's annual meeting in November.

Shaffer has served as one of the 16 district directors on the PFB State Board of Directors since 1994. He represents Farm Bureau members in the Columbia, Luzerne and Schuylkill/Carbon couny farm bureaus. Before becoming a state board member, he was a local farm leader serving over the years as a board member, vice president, president and legislative chairman of the Columbia County Farm Bureau.

PFB is a voluntary, nongovernmental organization which represents 25,851 member families in 54 county farm bureaus.

Shaffer, who owns a 300-acre grain and vegetable operation, recently received the Master Farmer Award from Pennsylvania Farmer magazine and Penn State University Cooperative Extension. He also farms 700 rented acres with the help of two full-time employees and one part-time

Effects Of Grain Prices Affect All Agriculture

VERNON ACHENBACH JR.

STATE COLLEGE (Centre Co.) — The sharp spike in grain prices has affected the entire production agriculture sector, causing producers to scramble to find low cost or alternative feeds in order to keep down production costs.

At the same time, prices for beef and cull cows are depressed and though reports of certain processors being inundated with cattle could not be confirmed by deadline, it is expected that there are a lot of meat cattle available for slaughter.

In Kenneth Kephart's column "Pork Prose" (see page C3 this issue) he outlines possible alternative feeds, though he notes that "... most are too expensive to consider, some are barely competitive" to corn.

Others have reported a market tightness on seeds, especially some of the newer bio-engineered versions resistant to herbicides, or designed with insect larva resistance.

For the local dairy industry, reports are that some have tight supplies or poor silage feed values because of last year's late-season drought affecting carbohydrate formation.

Those who depend upon all purchased feeds can be expected to be suffering in this perhaps unprecedented situation of high feed prices, high operating costs, low availability of feed and strong and anticipated stronger demand.

On top of this, fuel prices recently surged, and can be expected to

ANDY ANDREWS

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.) — American lamb producers are simply growing a product that is too fat — leading many packers and processors to seek a leaner product from countries such as Australia and New Zealand.

And if American producers want to seriously contend with local markets, they must turn out a high quality, lean, consistent lamb in the 65-75 pound dressweight range.

Those were some of the messages that about 25 lamb producers heard by a lamb merchandiser and university meats specialist on Tuesday night at a Penn-State sponsored Lamb Merchandising Workshop at the Farm and Home Center.

Bill Fox, president of Fox's Market (with stores in Middletown, Hershey, Harrisburg, and Camp Hill) has been in business

NY Phil Frozen Eggs

APRIL 26, 1996

Prices were lower for whole egg and blends, and unchanged for yolks and whites. The market tone began the week firm for yolks, but as shell egg prices fell, the undertone for whole egg and blends weakened, whites were barely steady to steady, and yolks were steady. Demand resumed a more immediate nature, and was mostly moderate to meet current needs. Floor stocks were usually adequate.

Shell egg and liquid offerings increased, and prices began to decrease mid-week. Edible liquid and frozen eggs (ingredients included) processed under federal inspection in the Eastern region for the week ending April 20, 1996 were 2% more than last week, and 1% more than the same week last year.

National Egg Market

Prices were unchanged to lower in the Northeast and Midwest, and prices were unchanged elsewhere. The market tone was steady to weak. Demand was mixed from poor to moderate with retail movement light, and food service generally better. Supplies were adequate to ample and readily available. Breaking stock supplies were at least adequate for the light to fair demand, and prices were lower; surplus graded eggs continued to be offered to breakers. Live hen offerings were at least adequate for the limited demand, and plant schedules continued to limit off farm movement.

New York Egg Market

Prices were lower. The market tone continued weak. Retail demand was generally no better than fair unless featured. Supplies were at least adequate or available.

PURSUIT IS NOW LABELED FOR ALFALFA.

(Is that the gasping of weeds we hear?)

Up until now weeds had it somewhat easy. Decreasing the forage quality of your stand with no real threat of punishment. That's about to change. Luckily, there's a new tool to help you manage your alfalfa — PURSUIT® herbicide. PURSUIT provides you with both contact and residual control of the toughest broadleaf weeds and grasses in alfalfa, leaving you with the highest forage quality possible. So don't let weeds have the upper hand this year. Use PURSUIT on alfalfa. For more information see your local AgriCenter dealer or simply call 1-800-942-0500.

National Grain Market

ST. JOSEPH, MO
MAY 1, 1996

Grain and soybean bids exploded, Wednesday, shooting limit up again. Wheat and corn bids were supported by active overnight export business, trade corrections, weather and crop concerns. Soybean bids received strength from higher wheat and corn trade and reports of substantial overnight Brazilian soymeal sales to China. Wheat 25 to 42 cents higher. Corn 11 to 21 cents higher. Sorghum 13 to 26 cents higher. Soybeans 21 to 27 cents higher. Very good export demand for US wheat to China lit a fire under bids after the past couple days of extreme lows on the board. Additional strength came from reports that the wheat quality council touring the hard red winter wheat areas estimated wheat yields even lower than earlier expected. Despite the much needed rain over the past couple of days, many winter wheat areas just aren't going to make it this year. Spring wheat planting delays also offered support to bids. Corn bids were higher after two days of active selling on the board. Weather seems to be a major supporter as planting delays due to rain and cold conditions in the northern Midwest are reported. Good overnight export orders for corn was also a plus factor. Soybean bids move sharply higher on strong meal demand and active fund buying. Indications that China bought a large amount of Brazilian bean meal overnight, sparked bean trading. OK City Feeder Cattle

OKLAHOMA CITY, OK

Compared to Monday of last week: Feeder cattle steady to 1.00 lower. Stocker cattle steady to 2.00 higher. Demand good for both stockers and feeders although buyers remain fairly selective for best kinds. Quality of the supply much improved from last week with large percentage average to attractive. Weigh condition favored sellers with cattle in average to full condition, few gaunt and conditions fuller than last week. Feeder flesh mostly medium; old crop stocker flesh thin to very thin. Few isolated sales of fleshy new crop calves 8.00-10.00 below thin old crops quoted in ML 1 grade. Demand improved with Friday and Monday's cattle futures limit up trade. Downturns in grain markets the stablizing factor as rains in cornbelt improved outlook for commodity traders. Rain forecasted for Sunday and Monday in the Oklahoma wheat belt did not materialize as traces were the most common reading. Slaughter cows and bulls steady to 1.00 higher. The OLD FARMER'S THIS WEEK WITH ALMANAC

MAY 8 - 14, 1995

MOTHER'S DAY LETTERS

Hilaria, an ancient spring festival to honor the mother goddess, Cybele, may have been the precusor to Mother's Day. Medieval England celebrated Mothering Sunday on the fourth Sunday of Lent, when apprentices got the day off to visit their mothers, often bringing an almond-flavored fruitcake. In the U.S., several late-19th century attempts to honor motherhood failed, until Anna M. Jarvis of Philadelphia began a letter-writing campaign, around 1907, and got Mother's Day recognized at the state level. In 1914, President Woodrow Wilson issued the national proclamation. See what a letter can do?

A bustling mother makes a slothful daughter.

— Latin proverb.

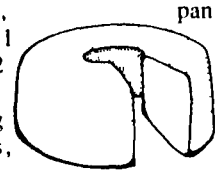
TIP OF THE WEEK

☞ If soot falls on the carpet, sprinkle it first with salt. Then it can be brushed up without leaving a black stain.

GREAT GRANDMOTHER'S SPONGE CAKE

- 2 cups sugar, divided
- 4 eggs
- 2 cups flour
- 2 teaspoons baking powder
- 2 teaspoons vanilla
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 1 cup hot milk
- 4 tablespoons melted butter

In a large bowl, beat together 1 cup sugar and 2 eggs until fluffy Add remaining sugar and eggs, beating constantly Sift together flour and baking powder three times, and gradually add to mixture. Add vanilla and salt Stir in hot milk and melted butter Pour into greased and floured 10-inch tube pan Bake at 350° F for 40 to 45 minutes. Cool on a rack.



Makes about 12 servings.

The OLD FARMER'S WEATHER PROVERBS

Saint Pancras (May 12) does not pass without frost.

In the middle of May comes the tail of winter.

A cold May is kindly and fills the barn finely.

The full Moon eats clouds.

Near full Moon, a misty sunrise bodes fair weather and cloudless skies.

OK City Feeder Cattle

OKLAHOMA CITY, OK

Compared to Monday of last week: Feeder cattle steady to 1.00 lower. Stocker cattle steady to 2.00 higher. Demand good for both stockers and feeders although buyers remain fairly selective for best kinds. Quality of the supply much improved from last week with large percentage average to attractive. Weigh condition favored sellers with cattle in average to full condition, few gaunt and conditions fuller than last week. Feeder flesh mostly medium; old crop stocker flesh thin to very thin. Few isolated sales of fleshy new crop calves 8.00-10.00 below thin old crops quoted in ML 1 grade. Demand improved with Friday and Monday's cattle futures limit up trade. Downturns in grain markets the stablizing factor as rains in combelt improved outlook for commodity traders. Rain forecasted for Sunday and Monday in the Oklahoma wheat belt did not materialize as traces were the most common reading. Slaughter cows and bulls steady to 1.00 higher. Demand good from packers. 737 cows and bulls sold 70 percent going to packers. Receipts this week 8,335; last week 7,100; last year 18,886. Supply consisted of 74 percent yearlings over 600 lbs; 17 percent calves and yearlings under 600 lbs; 9 percent cows and bulls. Prices follow with weighted average weight and price in parenthesis. OPINION

Beef For Dinner Tonight

We don't know why the cow was mad. Maybe she was disgusted because she picked up a virus somewhere and got sick. Or maybe she was furious because a news photographer took her picture when she wasn't looking her best.

We do know there is no such thing as "Mad Cow Disease." This is only an anonym for Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (BSE) given by the opponents of agriculture to scare people and cause economic loss to farmers and ranchers who follow scientifically prescribed methods of animal husbandry.

Actually, BSE has no scientific link with Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease (CJD), the human brain disorder found in 10 cases in the United Kingdom over the last two years. According to Dr. Tom Gomez, the liaison from the USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the cases in the UK are unique in that they varied from the usual CJD profile and may therefore be a new variant of the human disease. Differences from the typical symptoms for CJD include the young age of the persons affected, clinical findings, and the absence of electroencephalogram features.

"No known risk factors accounted for the 10 cases of CJD," Gomez said. "There is no direct evidence, but the most likely link is eating BSE-infected beef."

Speaking at the Livestock Conservation Institute's annual meeting in Colorado Springs, Gomez emphasized that there is no scientific data or proof of connection between BSE and CJD. Still, the announcement that there may be a link sent shock waves throughout Europe and the British cattle industry. And, of course, the live cattle futures market in Chicago dropped limit for several days early in April as the manipulators of public opinion moved the hysteria here.

When you consider 10 cases of CJD from an unknown source against the billions of hamburgers, steaks, and roasts that have been sold and eaten for their excellent, good tasteing, nutritious food value—what's for dinner tonight? Beef. Without question. It's a lot safer than getting out of bed in the morning.

To Sign Up For Clean and Green

If you have not already enrolled in Clean and Green for lower tax assessment, you have until June 1, 1996 to enroll for the 1997 tax year.

Lancaster County is planning on mailing out the new tax notices in mid May. These will be the values for the 1997 tax year.

Act 319, Clean and Green, allows farms to be assessed on the soil's income-producing ability instead of market value. This will mean a substantial tax savings for farmers.

If you signed up for Clean and Green in 1995, you will receive your Clean and Green assessment later this summer. You do not need to do anything now. If you did not sign up in 1995, you have until June 1 to participate in 1997.

If you have any questions about Clean and Green, call our office at (717) 394-6851.

Remember, you have 30 days to appeal your assessment once it is mailed from the county. To appeal your values, contact the Lancaster County Assessment office at (717) 299-8381.

To Register Water Use

John Hoffman, Pennsylvania Poultry Federation, reminds us that May 11, 1996 is the deadline for anyone using more than 10,000 gallons of water per day for any consecutive 30-day period to register that use with the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Protection.

The 10,000 gallons includes use from all sources, including public water supplies. Typical farming operations using more than 10,000 gallons of water per day are dairy operations with more than 200 cows, swine farrow-to-finish operations with more than 250 sows, and poultry laying operations with more than 125,000 chickens.

These figures are based on animal consumption and do not include water in cleanup, manure handling and evaporative cooling. If you did not receive a form and need to register you may call Harrisburg at (717) 772-4048.

To Evaluate Losses From Weeds

Robert Anderson, extension agronomy agent, reminds us that each weed species has a different effect on yield and quality.

Taller weeds and weeds that produce a large amount of biomass are usually more competitive and have a greater impact on production than do smaller weeds.

Even low populations of weeds create the potential for producing a very large number of seeds which could, in subsequent years, reduce crop yields.

Some weed species may cause a delay in harvesting the crop. Delays in harvesting could result in higher crop losses in the field and a reduction in crop quality.

Some weeds may also add seeds to the crop during harvest which must be removed before use. If those seeds cannot be removed, they could make the crop unusable.

Most research points to the need to achieve at least 95 percent control. However, if harvest efficiency, market value, and prevention of additional weed seeds to the soil are considered, then weed control should be in the 98 to 99 percent range.

ARE YOU HAPPY?

ARE YOU HAPPY?

Background Scripture:
Matthew 5:1-12
Devotional Reading:
Psalms 1:1-16

I have found that, if you ask people if they are happy, five out of 10 will reply, "What do you mean by 'happy'?"

Isn't it strange? Ask anyone almost any question and you get a "yes," "no" or something in-between. But when we ask if they are happy, many tend to answer our question with one of their own. Can you think of a term in our language that should be more easily understood then "happy" or "happiness?"

Yet, I can understand that repsonse, for I knew all about happiness until I started writing about it today. It all began when I began to look for a synonym for "blessed" as in "Blessed are the poor in spirit . . ." What does this "blessed" of the beatitudes mean, I wanted to know? My Bible dictionaries and commentaries suggested that "blessed" as used in the beatitudes means "happy" — "Happy are the poor in spirit." One writer said that the Greek word which we render as "blessed" denoted "the highest stage of happiness and well-being, such as the gods enjoy."

COMPLETELY SATISFIED

Then I asked myself what happiness means and that's when the trouble started, for I had already defined happiness for myself as being satisfied or contented. So, am I happy? Well, yes — but not entirely. I am not contented with the hate, misery and oppression I find in the world. I am not satisfied that I have done all I could to minister to those needs. And so on. (At that rate, who can be happy?).

Jesus says, "Happy are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 5:3). But how can that be? The kingdom of heaven is not here yet, not in its fullness. Jesus also says, "Happy are those who mourn, for they shall be comforted" (5:4). The words that tripped me up here were "shall be" — how can you be happy now if you will be comforted later?

I found help with these questions in two quotations I dug up. One of these was from T.S. Eliot's play, The Family Reunion: "I feel quite happy," Harry said, "as if happiness did not consist in getting what one wanted, or in getting rid of what can't be got rid of, but in a different vision." Instead of waiting for things to change before I can feel happy, Eliot's Harry is suggesting that one can be happy by seeing things differently. One doesn't have to wait for things to get better, if we can see our present situation in a different light — in the light of the Gospel.

AS CLOSE AS YOUR NOSE

The second quotation that helped me was from Josh Billings: "If you ever find happiness by hunting for it, you will find it as the old woman did her spectacles, safe on her nose all the time." We go looking to find happiness when all we need to be happy is already at hand — if only we recognized it. So happiness is not something that falls on you out of the blue, or that you catch like pneumonia. It is not something that is guaranteed to come with the right gift or material windfall. It is something we are carrying around inside of us and are just too stupid or stubborn to look.

Isn't this the happiness that Jesus promises in the Beatitudes? The people who are truly happy, says Jesus, are not those who have won the lottery, but those who see life and themselves through different eyes, with a different scale of values. That which they prize most highly is humility compassion, love, courage, faith and purity. When we have these qualities in our lives and recognize them as the highest good, we ARE happy. We don't have to wait for happiness to come to us. We already have it. I may not be satisfied with the world or even content with myself, but I am both satisfied and content to be in God's hands.

So, are you Happy?

Holstein A-Values For Merchandising, Evaluation

BRATTLEBORO, Vt. — While the A-Value Program appeals to Holstein breeders looking for an additional evaluation and marketing tool, it also appeals to others in the industry involved in merchandising Holsteins. Both sale managers and AI personnel have expressed interest in the new program.

The Holstein Association's A-Value Program uses actual performance data, and was initiated by Association members in 1992. A-Values recognize the value of cow families. Starting in late 1996, the Holstein Association will begin producing official A-Value Herd Reports and printing official A-Values on pedigrees, providing breeders with information previously unavailable.

Many breeders have expressed favorable reactions to the program, noting that A-Values will provide another selection tool when the merchandise their Holsteins. Others within the industry have agreed, saying tools like this are needed.

"I think this is exciting," said Tom Morris, sale manager from Amery, Wis. "Any tool that helps make the breed better is certainly an asset. This gives credit to cows and cow families within herds and across the population of the breed that have been performing over the long haul."

Morris added he thought A-Values would be a "great ranking tool."

"I've waited for this a long time, and I think we've really needed it," he said. "This has generated a great deal of interest, maybe as much interest as has been generated in a long, long time. I think people are really interested in it."

Dick Chichester of Select Sires in Plain City, Ohio, noted he thought the A-Value Program could prove beneficial.

"I think the concept of the A-Value system is desirable and useful," he said. "I know of many herds who have an excellent breeding program, use the best bulls, are excellent managers and excellent cullers, but they have no indexes."

Chichester went on to say he didn't think the index system was "the beginning or the end of the way to breed cows. But in herds like that, it seems to me until we have a better index system, this is certainly a worthy effort."

Chichester and Morris both are strong believers in cow families, as is Pete Blodgett of Alta Genetics, Landmark Division in Hughson, Calif. Blodgett said he was not sure how A-Values would affect the industry until it had passed the test of time.

"A-Values really won't change the rankings of cows now ranked high," he said, "but it may change others' rankings."

Blodgett added he didn't know how A—Values would be received until they were out and available. "We think the current USDA system is recognized around the world, and has served us pretty well," he said. "But the A-Values will be good if it sorts out the genetics we're not now using. If it proves to be a true genetic transmitter to sons, daughters, and grandsons, then it's good."

The method for determining A-Values is relatively simple. Performance measures of a cow and her next three dams in the maternal line are used in calculating the A-Values for the cow herself. Actual performance for milk, fat, protein, and type (final score) is the primary basis of the A-Value Program.

All A-Values will be expressed as percentile rankings 0-9. Each animal will have an A-Value (percentile ranking) for milk, fat, protein, type, and an "overall" A-Value that combines the traits protein, fat and type at a ratio of 9:3:8 respectively.

The three agreed that allowing A-Values the opportunity to be accepted industry-wide is necessary.

"I think it would be an error in judgment to write this off immediately, but by the same token, I think it would be an error to adopt it as the one and only way to look at genetics," Chichester said.

Blodgett expressed similar thoughts. "We'll certainly stand back and look at the program," he said. "We'll certainly give it a shot."

Morris sais that dairymen everywhere are looking for the same thing from dairy cows, and having another tool to select them is important.

"There is no question that dairymen everywhere — whether thay are a registered breeder or a commercial milk prducer — are looking for the same basic type cow," he said. "They want a cow that's easy to work with, that requires a limited amount of maintenance, and has proven production over an extended period of time. It should be our goal as an Association and as a breed to help dairymen in this country and worldwide breed a more profitable cow, and I think A-Values will be a tool to do that."

CHORE-TIME ...nobody knows more about feeding

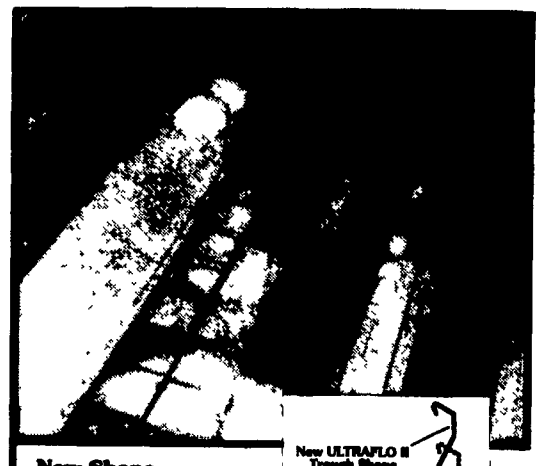
The Right Choice in turkey feeders

RUGGED POLYPROPYLENE construction of Model ATF pan is available for permanent corrosion-proofing. Material has an ultra-smooth surface so feed and dirt won't stick, so it stays clean. Our polypropylene also has a special ultraviolet inhibitor. Liberal 5-year pan warranty! Ask for details.

FEED SAVER FEATURES: unique "V" pan shape lets you maintain a low feed level; feed-saver ring: 2 1/2" pan lip to catch feed.

FEED PAN DEPTH on Stage 3 Feeder is 5-1/2 inches; 8-week old birds or the largest toms can reach feed.

Chore-Time Model ATF Feeder with polypropylene pan shown. Also available with galvanized steel pan.



New Shape
The difference is the shape of the feeder's trough (at right). ULTRAFLO II's higher trough lip reduces feed waste by keeping it in the trough and not on the floor or in the pit.

The Right Choice in cage feeders

Chore-Time's popular ULTRAFLO® Cage Feeding System is now even more outstanding! We've developed and tested the second generation of ULTRAFLO feeders and named it the ULTRAFLO® II.

ULTRAFLO II offers you even greater reliability, durability, and outstanding feed-saving performance—up to 1 gram of feed per bird per day—over the original ULTRAFLO. And even the original ULTRAFLO was beating our competitors in feed savings!

So, join the cage feeding leader. Contact us today. Find out how Chore-Time and ULTRAFLO II can help you be a leader, too!

SHOW AND TELL.
THE ZETOR QUALITY DIFFERENCE ISN'T KID'S STUFF!

Suggested manufacturer's retail price for Model 4340 with cab: $24,632.00 F.O.B. List.

Suggested manufacturer's retail price for Model 6340 without cab: $25,128.00 F.O.B. List.

Your Zetor dealer wants to SHOW you the lower prices available on every Zetor model. Then to convince yourself that there's more to a Zetor than its low prices, test drive the 4340 (59HP) or the 6340 (73HP) models shown above.

You'll be surprised at the power of the Series 43 tractors. They're built to last, come with a 2-year warranty, and have the same power train as the Series 63, which enables you to accomplish as much, or more, than you can with a competitive tractor that has more horsepower.

Don't overlook Zetor's rugged 4WD, Model 6340 (shown above). It's a real muscle machine. Check out its cast iron chassis that assures added stability and superior performance in the field.

Every Zetor has a cast iron reputation! Then TELL your Zetor dealer you want to buy one Any one!

Two Turnpike Farmers Markets Start Selling Season

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Two farmers markets were scheduled to re-open on the Pennsylvania Turnpike on Friday, May 3, according to Agriculture Secretary Charles C. Brosius.

"Now that winter has finally let go of its grip on the North East, farmers have set their sights on the new growing season," Brosius said. "Many of them will be offering early season vegetables, plants and farm specialties for sale at farmers markets around Pennsylvania, including two on the Pennsylvania Turnpike. Other farm-fresh products will be available at all of these markets as the growing season progresses.

"The Ridge administration is committed to expanding agricultural markets and increasing farm profitability," Brosius said. "Farmers markets are a win-win situation. Consumers can buy fresh wholesome products and farmers are the direct benefactor from increased sales."

The markets opening this weekend for travelers on the Turnpike are located at the Sideling Hill Service Plaza and Allentown Service Plaza. Both markets were in operation last year under a successful pilot program.

The Sideling Hill Service Plaza is accessible to east- and westbound traffic between exits 12 and 13. Hours are Friday from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m., Saturday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. On holiday weekends, Monday hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Ten vendors are scheduled to sell fruits and vegetables, potted plants and bedding plants, baked goods, eggs and honey.

Hours at the north and southbound Allentown Service Plaza near Exit 33 are Friday from 11 a.m. to dusk, Saturday from 10 a.m. to dusk and Sunday from 11 a.m. to dusk. On holiday weekends, Monday hours are 11 a.m. to dusk.

Two other markets are tentatively scheduled to open on the Pennsylvania Turnpike around Memorial Day. The market at the New Stanton Service Plaza will be accessible to westbound traffic only, while the Valley Forge Service Plaza will allow eastbound traffic a market stop.

Pennsylvania's 50,000 farm families and 2,300 food processing companies are known nationally and internationally for their quality products. They support a complex $43 billion industry which creates jobs for 20 percent of the commonwealth's residents.

WILL THE IRS INHERIT YOUR ESTATE?

New York Life's Survivorship Whole Life policy was created to provide you and your spouse with life insurance coverage, and needed liquidity, when your estate taxes are due.

It works like this: When one spouse dies, the resulting estate tax can be deferred until after the death of the surviving spouse. At that time, the policy's proceeds become available, and can be used to help pay the usually heavy estate tax. In other words, New York Life makes the proceeds available when they're needed the most.

You've worked hard all of your life, and shouldn't have to spend time worrying about what will happen to your estate. Call us for all the details and let us show you why New York Life is The Company You Keep.

State Grange Host To State Legislature

VERNON ACHENBACH JR.
Lancaster Farming Staff

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — An estimated 350 people participated in the annual Pennsylvania State Grange legislative banquet Monday evening at the Sheraton-East in Harrisburg.

The Pennsylvania State Grange is an organization representing rural communities throughout the state. Its membership is about 30,000 and it has affiliate groups in 66 of the state's 67 counties.

About 80 legislators had indicated they would attend the event, which seats legislators at tables with Grange members from the respective legislative districts. Even though the Legislature was in session, most all legislators who indicated they would, were able to attend.

The purpose of the banquet is to allow legislators and members an opportunity to discuss one-to-one the issues that currently affect rural life, such as opportunities and ideas that may help eliminate barriers to rural life goals, and ideas on possible solutions to existing problems.

Gordon Hiller, state master, presided over the banquet and received a proclamation from Gov. Tom Ridge, with the banquet presentation made by Chris Herr, Department of Agriculture deputy secretary, and Jane Brosius, for her husband, Secretary of Agriculture Charles Brosius.

Secretary Brosius also served as a speaker for one of the Grange's 12 pre-banquet workshops held at the hotel. For photographers, he presented the award to Hiller prior to the banquet.

Banquet speaker was Joy Dunbar, executive director of RULE, who talked about effective leadership, leadership styles, and developing leadership and motivational skills. She also talked about the role of the Grange in being a catalyst in helping people develop those skills.

Brenda Shambaugh, Grange legislative director, outlined Grange policy. The Grange annually develops policy through its membership.

Some of the issues included a proposed "rebalancing" of telephone rates by Bell Atlantic, that essentially would increase rural rates to lower city and urban rates in order to outcompete with smaller upstart companies offering lower service prices in target areas.

The Grange has been the leading rural and agricultural organization to challenge the proposal. (See April 27 issue of Lancaster Farming.)

"The Grange vehemently opposes any attempt to rebalance the pricing structure especially when the motivating factor is based on competition form other companies," Shambaugh said. "This proposed increase may have gone unnoticed if it had not been for the Grange."

In other issues, Shambaugh said the Grange supports local tax reform legislation (Senate Bill 2) that would require less reliance on property taxes and more emphasis on equal taxes, as well as providing more local control of how the tax formula is derived.

Shambaugh said the reason for more local control is because each political subdivision has its own unique mixture of taxable resources. A statewide forced reliance on taxing property doesn't allow communities to tap into their real assets, or to provide fairness according to ability to pay.

Shambaugh said getting such tax reform is key to empowering rural Pennsylvanians to escape the downspiraling drain on local rural property owners whose income is derived from local business. In many areas such property tax reliance forces out local ownership and creates incentives to sell property to development corporations.

"This measure (type of local tax reform) gives municipalities and school districts greater flexibilty in levying taxes based on their own tax forumla. In municipalities that design a new tax formula, voters could later veto any proposed property tax increase higher that the rate of economic growth of the area."

A 6½ -cent per gallon gas tax proposed by Gov. Ridge to shore up funds for state road and bridge repairs to damage caused by this winter's storms and flood is also an issue. Shambaugh said that legislators should remember that existing state policy calls for a 3-cent gas tax and a 3-percent oil franchise tax to pay for damages.

She said that the Grange is pleased that state education reform is being addressed piecemeal instead of in a broadbrush manner, especially with recent tenure reform and with proposed sabbatical reform.

"Grange policy has advocated tenure reform for a number of years, and we were pleased to see that it was increased from two to three years," Shambaugh said. "However, Grange policy calls for teacher tenure to be tendered after five years of satisfactory teaching experience."

The proposed sabbatical reform would prohibit teachers from using sabbaticals for travel, early retirement or as severance pay, but it could be utilized for the purpose of study or for health. The Grange policy is reflected in the proposal.

The governor's state budget proposal also provides issues of contention for the Grange. Specifically, the Grange is seeking restoration of funding for the University of Pennsylvania School of Veterinary Medicine.

The proposed funding cut to the school was highlighted by a recent formation of a coalition of agricultural and public health-concerned organizations to educate legislators, the Ridge administration and others on the importance of funding the vet school.

As part of an attempt to reduce state spending, Ridge proposed a budget that reduces all spending except for prisons, which would receive a large increase.

The vet school however, is key to the state's agriculture and food processing industries' exporting attempts, as well as its competitive edge, and animal health (and related human health).

It is also important that the school has the lowest amount of state support among peer vet schools, depends heavily on research grants to pay staff, and has already reached the limit in funding from the university and other sources to maintain its reduced staff.

It also has one of the highest tuitions for instate students because of continued cuts of state support. Coalition members expressed disappointment in the lack of understanding of critical elements in the state's animal industry.

They further expressed disbelief that the proposal was made, in light of the fact that the coalition had previously formed under the administration of former-Gov. Robert Casey to successfully battle Casey's proposal to do the same thing.

During the coalition meeting, which the Grange supports, it was also announced that if state funding for the school goes through at the reduced level proposed — slashed by $5.6 million — it will probably signal the end of what the president of the American Veterinary Association called the best vet school in the world.

"The public must realize that food safety and animal and human health work done at the New Bolton Center (a research center of the vet school) has a profound impact on our daily lives and that the negative ramifications of discontinuing this research goes far beyond agriculture," Shambaugh said.

"The budget that was proposed would also discontinue the student loand forgiveness programs for rural teachers and ag students who go back to rural areas. These programs were passed by the General Assembly to get college graduates back in rural areas."

In addition to those issues, Shambaugh said the Grange is currently working on legislation to create an agricultural specialty license plate, a returnable beverage container law, and to protect property owner rights.

She said the Grange has also been opposed to riverboat gambling.

The workshops were offered in three different tracks, depending on Grange member interest.

In addition to the presentation by state Secretary of Agriculture Charles Brosius, the political track included a presentation by Joseph Dudick, who is executive director of the Pa. Rural Development Council and also the governor's rural advisor. Dudick discussed

Morrow, Hiller Seek Re-Election To Penn State Trustee Board

STATE COLLEGE (Centre Co.) — David Morrow, a dairy enthusiast, veterinarian, and educator, and Gordon Hiller, master of the Pennsylvania State Grange are seeking re-election to Penn State's board of trustees. Four Pennsylvania agricultural societies have endorsed Morrow and Hiller for re-election. They include PA Farm Bureau, PA State Grange, PA Holstein Association, and PA Council of Farm Organizations.

During his past three-year term, Morrow served as vice chair and chair of the physical plant committee, chair of the architectural selection committee, and was a member of both Research Park and Corporation boards, as well as a member of the presidential selection committee.

Dave Morrow

Hiller in his past three-year term served on the environment committee and was named to the external advisory committee to the dean search process. He is the current overseer to New Bolton Center, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia.

Both men have extensive service to the University, The College of Agricultural Sciences, and the agricultural community. Both have received numerous awards for their many accomplishments.

The representatives from Pennsylvania agricultural societies will elect two members to the Penn State Board of Trustees on May 9.

State Grange

rural initiatives of the Ridge administration.

He was followed by U.S. Sen. Rick Santorum, who filled in for state Secretary of Education Eugene Hickok who was unable to attend. Santorum discussed in general terms some federal issues.

Secretary of the Department of Environmental Protection James Seif gave a presentation on "The Environment and You," and answered questions from the floor.

One of the key goals Seif has addressed within the department was to change its working relationship with business and landowners from adversarial to cooperational, although apparently at least one outspoken Grange member was unconvinced that enough change has occured in the year that the department has begun its reorganization.

A second track featured speakers discussing agriculturally related topics.

John Heberon of Rodale Press talked about "natural food" for health and treatment; Bob Johnson with Favorite Recipies Press discussed "cookbook marketing;" Susan Paris, president of Americans For Medical Progress, talked about the efforts and benefits of animal medical research and humans; while Deb Goodrich, a teacher, gave a presentation on the Ag in the Classroom program.

The third track of workshops dealt with lighter subjects. Becky Michalka, director of Grange women's activities, talked about the value of hands-on experiences; Martha Ebersole and Deb Campbell, Grange youth and junior member directors, gave a presentation on stenciling; Don Evans, Grange state lecturer, talked about different experiences in being a lecturer; while Sandy Westover, a director for the Grange, talked about the Grange services and benefits.

In other business, state Rep. Russell Fairchild, R-Snyder and Union counties, presented a special citation from the House of Representatives to Grange Master (president) Hiller and his wife Mary to commemorate their 50th anniversary, which the couple celebrated last week.

The next statewide event for the Pennsylvania State Grange is its annual convention set to be held Oct 28-31, in Warren. For more information on the Grange call toll free at (800) 552-3865.

NASDA Calls For Meat Inspection Reform Legislation

RENO, Nev. — The National Association of State Departments of Agriculture (NASDA) recently stated that the 104th Congress should consider and pass legislation reforming the meat and poultry inspection system.

The commissioners, secretaries and directors of the state departments of agriculture released draft legislation last August which they suggested should be used as the foundation for reform of the nation's inspection laws.

According to a NASDA spokesman speaking recently in Reno, Nevada to the annual meeting of the Western Region of the National Association of State Meat and Food Inspection Directors (NASMFID), the organization is members believe it is essential that Congress reform the inspection system this year and not allow election year politics to stall meaningful food safety reform.

"In our opinion the current inspection system must be reformed both by legislation and through the regulatory process," said NASDA Director of Legislative and Regulatory Affairs Mark C. Nestlen. "Rather than building a new ivory HACCP tower on top of the weak foundation of the current system, we need to construct a new product from the foundation up."

Nestlen explained that NASDA had carefully reviewed the current system, analyzed options for reform, and met with members of Congress, the administration, health groups, and industry to formulate the "risk-based, science-based proposal which will bring much needed reform to the meat and poultry inspection system."

He said that state officials are at the "front lines" of the food safety system. "Preserving the safety and integrity of the nation's food supply and assuring the health and safety of the public is our highest calling," Nestlen said, adding that even though "the American food supply is the safest in the world, there are always ways to improve, and the opportunity exists today."

While the current meat and poultry inspection system has served well in the past, Nestlen said it is in need of an overhaul.

"The new system our legislation proposes will replace the outdated ineffective parts of the current law while preserving the effective parts. It does not simply layer a concept on top of the current system, but provides a comprehensive revision of the inspection system," Nestlen said.

The legislation proposed by NASDA will create a new inspection system authorized by a single law calling for mandatory science-based inspection at all levels of production of all species whose flesh is used for food, including meat, poultry, exotic and aquatic animals.

"Retail and restaurant operations have evolved and today are conducting complex processing with significantly less oversight when compared to similar risks," Nestlen said. "Some of those processes include grinding, curing, smoking, vacuum packaging, and distribution of meat, poultyr and seafood products which have the potential to pose significant risks to the consumer."

Nestlen said the NASDA approach provides for a government-wide evaluation of food safety. "When properly coordinated, such an evaluation will eliminate costly duplication and will result in a better food regulation system, and provide for the allocation of scarce fiscal resources in a manner that ensures the safety of the American food supply," he said.

A NASDA policy statement insists that in order to meet today's demand for a meat and poultry supply that is safe from all hazards, including pathogens that cannot be detected by traditional means, it is evident that current meat and poultry inspection laws must be changed.

"Meat and poultry inspection reform should include the best available technoloty while retaining those parts of current meat and poultry inspection laws which have assured the United States public a safe supply of meat and poultry in the past," Nestlen said.

This includes careful organoleptic examination of animals and carcasses by trained professionals to detect disease, tumors and other neoplasms, inflammation, bruises, fractures, parasites, and injection sites. Animals affected by any diseases transmissible to man such as tuberculosis, and animals with toxemia or septicemia can best be detected through sensory evaluation during ante- and post-mortem examination."

Nestlen explained that meat, poultry and seafood, and meat, poultry and seafood products can be produced safely through cooperative efforts of the industry and the government utilizing scientific inspection systems such as the Hazard Analysis and Critical Control Points (HACCP) system rather than continuous inspection.

"Any change in meat and poultry inspection should consider all businesses in the meat manufacturing arena. Risk assessments in all areas from farm-to-table should be accomplished and inspection resources allotted respective to the amount of risk to the consumer based on the type of process and product rather than the type of distribution system," Nestlen continued.

"The public should be confident in their belief that all flesh foods offered for sale or prepared for consumption have been prepared under an effective inspection system."

The NASDA proposal also provides for a public education program on the proper handling of meat, poultry and seafood by consumers and food handlers.

"It is equally important that the public know that with current technology it is impossible to guarantee a meat supply that is free of microbes; therefore, the consumer, an important link in preventing food borne illnesses related to meat products, must be provided with continuous educational information regarding safe food handling," Nestlen stated.

Nestlen suggested that the risks of foodborne disease will be reduced by incorporating HACCP principles into all phases of food production.

"HACCP plans developed by producers, slaughterers, processors, retailers, and restaurants will assess the risks at all levels of production and introduce steps at each of these levels to reduce the possibility of foodborne disease. Our legislation clearly changes the inspection system to a risk-based system by requiring wholesale and retail operations that provess meat, poultry and seafood products be subject to inspection," he said, adding that "by eliminating the exemptions found in the current law and thereby adding retail and food service establishments to the requirements, we are mandating a total food system inspection process which will enhance food safety."

The NASDA representative also explained that the bill will require the secretary of agriculture to work with the livestock and poultry producer community to develop on-farm quality assurance programs.

"These programs should be developed for each industry and each segment of production through a coordinated, cooperative effort of producers, producer organizations, veterinary practitioners, state agencies concerned with animal and human health, universities, and appropriate federal agencies," he said.

"Preharvest quality assurance programs should identify diseases, conditions, chemical agents, and microorganisms of concern to food safety." He said the bill also directs USDA to identify research needs so necessary epidemiological and ecological data can be generated that will identify risk factors, diagnostic procedures, critical control points, and intervention strategies.

"Finally, our bill will continue the strong relationship between the federal inspection program and state inspection programs. The measure places the same requirements on small, state inspected plants and removes the unfair economic prohibition against shipping state-inspected product in interstate commerce," Nestlen concluded, noting that "Farm Bill Two" recently introduced by House Agriculture Committee Chairman Pat Roberts (R-KS) would eliminate the unfair prohibition.

The bill proposed by NASDA would:

- Create a new comprehensive inspection authorized by a single law.
- Mandate a science-based, risk-based inspection system at all levels of production from slaughter through retail.
- Include all species whose flesh is used for food, includiong meat, poultry, exotic animals and seafood.
- Provide for voluntary quality assurance programs to reduce the occurence of pathogens at the farm or ranch level.
- Mandate a national public education program on the appropriate handling and preparation of meat, poultry and seafood by consumers and foods service handlers.
- Authorize USDA to conduct research regarding improved sanitation methods and other techniques which lead to safer food supply.
- Continue the cooperative relationship between the federal inspection program and equivalent state programs.

State, National Officials Pledge Conservation Partnership

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — State and national government and non-profit private organization officials signed an agreement late last week during a special ceremony at the Harrisburg Area Capitol Campus (HACC) that recognized the history of cooperation and interdependence of the agencies and which promised each signatory's continued cooperation in protecting the environment.

Involved in the agreement were 12 state and federal agencies or organizations.

Signing the pact were representatives of the state Department of Environmental Protection, the state Department of Conservation of Natural Resources, the state Department of Agriculture, the state Game Commission, the state Fish and Boat Commission, the USDA Natural Resources Conservation Services (formerly the Soil Conservation Service), the USDA Rural Economic and Community Development Service (formerly the Farmer's Home Administration), the USDA Consolidated Farm Services Agency (formerly the USDA Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service), the Pennsylvania State Grange, Penn State University College of Agricultural Sciences and Extension, the State Conservation Commission, and the Pennsylvania Association of Conservation Districts.

The partnership pledge outlines a commitment by each agency to provide leadership "to Pennsylvania" on natural resource issues.

"As partners, we depend on each other to carry out programs successfully, effectively and efficiently," the agreement stated.

The stated guiding principles of the partnership pact included commitments to:

- sustaining, improving, and conserving our natural resources and environment;
- improving the quality of life for future generations;
- listening, anticipating and responding to our customers' needs;
- anticipating, identifying and addressing issues;
- building new alliances to expand our partnership;
- supporting a holistic approach to conservation planning;
- and fostering economically viable environmental policies.

Further, the partnership agreement included a pledge to advance and practice teamwork; involved each partner in the decision-making process; ensure Pennsylvania citizens have access to healthy food and clean water; communicate, coordinate and cooperate; share training opportunities; promote mutual respect, support, trust and honesty; and share the leadership and ownership, the credit and responsbility.

The program was moderated by Sylvia Rainford, with the NRCS.

Charles Brosius, current chairman of the State Conservation Commission, talked about the effort during the ceremony, saying that it was appropriate for the ceremony to have occurred during the week in which Earth Day (April 22) was celebrated and prior to the current observation of official Soil and Water Stewardship Week (ending today).

"Each one of us here has both responsibilities and a commitment to work together to ensure that all of the commonwealth's citizens share an abundant suppy of nutritions, economical, delicious, wholesome food and clean water," Brosius said.

"Our farmers are committed to producing food in the most safe and efficient manner possible, and that includes practicing soil conservation methods and management techniques that have minimal effect on humans and on the environment."

From the left, seated, Richard Sprenkle, deputy secretary of the state Department of Conservation of Natural Resources, sits with Secretary of DEP James Seif who signs a conservation partnership pledge along with Secretary of Agriculture Charles Brosius and Janet Oertly, state conservationist with the USDA NRCS. Standing from the left are Roger Lehman, Pa. Game Commission; Cheryl Cook II, director of the USDA Rural Economic and Community Development Service; William Baumgartner, state executive director of the Pa. USDA Consolidated Farm Service Agency; Karl Brown, executive director of the State Conservation Commission; James Starling, dean of the Penn State College of Ag Sciences; Gordon Hiller, master of the Pa. State Grange; and Pat Sueck, second vice president of the Pa. Association of Conservation Districts. Missing from photo was a representative of the state Fish and Boat Commission.

Repeating an oft-uttered statement, Brosius said that farmers were the first environmentalists and have been committed to using resources wisely.

"It not only makes good sense to be friendly to the environment, but it is also economically sound," he said.

"Practices such as integrated pest management are becoming an integral part of effective farming operations. We have seen enormous changes during the past year at the state level.

"In fulfillment of a campaign promise, Gov. Ridge moved immediately to create the Department of Environmental Protection and the Department of Conservation and Natural Resources.

"And with the creation of the new departments came a new spirit and a new mindset — one of reaching out and working together to educate the public while preserving our natural resources," he said.

We're all glad to see the spring pastures finally green up. Spring has been late this year, and many dairy producers have been delayed in getting cows to pasture.

Slow pasture growth has been particularly frustrating because of limited supplies on many farms. Spring pasture is welcomed by all including the cows, but has many challenges for managing the plants and animals.

This year, perhaps more than most years, pastures will all be ready to graze at a similar time. Proper grazing management and decisions on excess pastures to set aside for harvesting are most important. Proper supplementation of these high quality pastures is also a challenge, particularly with the high prices of supplemental feeds this year.

• Pasture quality. Pasture availability and quality are the two most important factors in maximizing the amount of nutrients obtained from pastures.

With proper pasture management that maintains pastures in a vegetative state and at a pasture height of 6-9 inches, pasture quality will be high. A typical chemical analyses of spring pastures during the 6-7 weeks of spring is:

Pasture
Dry Matter, %	15-18
Total protein, %	22-26
Degradable proteins, % of total protein	75-80
Acid detergent fiber, %	23-26
Neutral detergent fiber, %	35-42
Net energy of lactation, mcal/lb	.74-.78
Nonfiber carbohydrates, %	18-22

The high total protein and NEL and the low fiber content indicate a high quality forage. However, there are nutritional limitations to spring pastures:

• The forage is very wet (80-85 percent moisture)

• Protein is highly degradable in the rumen and not effeciently utilized

• Low "effective fiber"

• A lower energy value for the cow than the "paper" value

These limitations, if not properly supplemented, may lead to high nutrient passage through the digestive tract (and loose manure). The inadequate fiber can contributed to low milk fat tests. Ineffecient utilization of the high protein content and the energy cost to the cow to excrete this excess protein, and the less energy avaiable to the cow can lead to less than optional milk production. These limitations suggest that we need to strategically supplement pasture to maximize the utilization of this high quality pasture.

• Pasture alone. With the short supply and high prices of supplemental feeds, it is tempting to reduce the amount of suppmental feeds. Based on studies from New Zealand and other countries, intake from high quality spring pastures may provide sufficient nutrients to maintain 35 to 45 pounds of milk with little or no supplemental energy. Cows in early lactation may be expected to produce 50-65 pounds of milk per day with pasture as the only forage. However, these cows will likely lose extensive body weight and condition because of inadequate energy intake and inefficient utilization of protein in pasture. Reproductive efficiency may decline if cows lose too much body condition.

Eric Kolver, a graduate student from New Zealand who is studying at Penn State, conducted this study as part of his thesis research. Early lactation cows were fed only high quality ryegrass/white clover pasture in the spring of 1995. Cows on pasture consumed about 42 pounds of DM or 3.4 percent of body weight. Milk production averaged 66 pounds per day. However, then compared to control cows fed a TMR, the cows consumed 10 pounds less DM/day, produced 30 pounds less milk, and lost more body condition. The results further support the need to feed supplemental feeds to our high producing Holstein cows when grazing high quality pasture.

• Forage supplementation. Pasture is the lowest cost forage, and we should maximize the intake of pasture through proper grazing management. However, lush spring pasture is 80 to 85 percent moisture which leads to a fast passage of feedstuffs through the digestive tract. Spring pasture is often low in NDF and low in "effective fiber." This can lead to low milk fat tests. Feeding a few pounds of long hay will add some effective fiber, and will likely slow the rate of feed passage. Of interest is that some New Zealand dairy producers often feed a couple pounds of low quality hay or straw for this exact reason. Corn silage can be an excellent supplemental forage because it adds needed nonfiber carbohydrates (NFC) as a source of energy for the rumen microbes and also "dilutes" out the high protein in spring pasture. Corn silage is an excellent forage for dairy producers who feed a TMR with pasture. One management problem is that adequate amounts must be removed from a silo daily to maintain good quality silage.

• Energy (Grain) Supplementation. Energy is thought to be the most limiting nutrient when pasture is the major source of forage. The amount of grain needed to increase the total energy intake on a pasture based system can have long-term effects on energy balance, milk production, body weight and condition changes, reproductive performance, and profitability. Research and producer experiences indicate that supplemental energy from grain is beneficial and profitable with high producing cows under a grazing system.

Supplemental grain benefits the cow in two ways: (1) it provides needed energy for activity (walking, grazing) and (2) provides a source of rumen available NFC. While pasture can be quite high in protein, it is low in NFC. Without additional NSC in the diet, protein may be used for energy, and excess nitrogen is excreted in urine. The "energy cost" of excreting this Nitrogen may decrease milk by 6-7 pounds per day. Thus, valuable protein is lost to the animal and excreted into the environment. The result is lower performance and a higher nutrient loading into soil and water.

Providing grain supplements rich in NFC and lower in protein (nitrogen) can help to "capture" more of the protein in pasture and "convert" it to milk protein. Research shows milk production responses of ½ to 1½ pounds for each pound of grain fed. We can expect about a 1 pound milk yield increase for each 1 pound of grain fed for the first 10-12 pound of grain fed. This response to grain decreases as more grain is fed. This is profitable even with today's grain prices. Research at Ohio State reported about a 1 pound milk response to 1 pound of grain fed with both orchardgrass and alfalfa based pasture systems. With milk priced at 12 cents per pound and grain at 8 to 9 cents per pound, grain feeding on pasture still makes economic sense; however, we may want to utilize this grain for high producing cows at a grain: milk ratio of about 1 to 5.

Conservation Partnership

He also talked about the changes made to the State Conservation Commission, that were made as a compromise to agricultural interests in light of the enactment and enforcement of the Nutrient Management Act.

In an effort to shift the balance of power away from DEP, the chairmanship of the commission was changed from a continuous role by the secretary of DEP to an alternating chairmanship between the secretary of agriculture and the secretary of DEP.

Also, support staff for the commission was setup within the Department of Agriculture, shifting some positions from DEP over to the PDA.

Further, the commission's executive director was changed in that the director is now independent of employment to either state agency. Previously, the executive director of the Conservation Commission was also a DEP employee.

Those changes were made at the same time legislation was passed to create the two agencies — DEP and DCNR — out of the former Department of Environmental Resources.

"Much of the commission's attention has been focused on gearing up for the implementation of the nutrient management regulations," Brosius said, adding that the regulations "... will have a direct impact on cleaning up the rivers and streams of Pennsylvania, and the bodies of water into which they flow.

"The signing of this pledge today is a public display of the commitment of our respective departments to the citizens of this commonwealth; a commitment to preserve and protect the recreational and open spaces that they enjoy and which give Pennsylvania its unique character.

"It is also a commitment to ensure their future access to these areas, and, by protecting farmland, ensuring the future of the food supply."

In addition to Secretary Brosius and DEP Secretary James Seif, those present included Janet Oertly, state conservationist in charge of the Pennsylvania USDA NRCS; Roger Lehman, representing the Game Commission; Cheryl Cook II, director of the USDA Rural Economic and Community Development Service; William Baumgartner, state executive director of the Consolidated Farm Service Agencies; Karl Brown, executive director of the State Conservation Commission; James Starling, dean of the Penn State University College of Agricultural Sciences; Gordon Hiller, master of the Pennsylvania State Grange; and Pat Sueck, second vice president of Pa. Association of Conservation Districts.

A representative from the Pa. Fish and Boat Commission was unable to attend.

tures and efficiently convert grass and hay into milk and meat even in hot weather, breed back quickly each year, and have a long life time average.

Enter the Dutch Belted cows, nicknamed oreo cookies because of their distinctive markings of white middles and black front and rear ends. This dairy breed, highly prized for milking and fattening abilities, began to flourish in Holland around 1750. According to the records of the Dutch Belted Cattle Association of America, published in June, 1923, the first importation was by Consul D. H. Hoight in 1838. P.T. Barnum, the great showman, brought more Dutch Belts in 1840 for exhibition in his circus. Later these animals were placed on a farm and became the foundation of the herd in America.

Winifred Hoffman, a prominant breeder from Illinois, reported in the breed's February, 1994, national newsletter that Dutch Belted Cattle were found in 1908 at the California State Fair where the cow, Julia Marlow, made the most butterfat at each milking for five consecutive days over all breeds. Again in 1909 Julia was second to another Dutch Belt, Lady Fresno. These performances were the more remarkable because in 1909 there were only 18 Dutch Belted females of milking age in the state of California.

Passing on to the year 1914, the best four cows in milk over all breeds at the Arizona State Fair were Dutch Belts, and in 1920 Ferndell was the champion dairy cow in the state of Florida.

The Dutch Belted breed flourished in the U.S. as a dairy breed from around 1815 to 1940. Pennsylvania had one of the largest state herds of Dutch Belted cattle at the time. The national herdbook was established in 1886, and Kristie Kobosky, a senior at Penn State and daughter of the current president of the national breed association, has found this first Dutch Belted herd book and all the succeeding year herd books up to 1925 in the Penn State College of Agricultural Sciences library. This is the oldest continuously registering herd book for belted cattle in the world. Even in Holland there has not been a continuous herdbook, with their current herdbook restarted in 1979.

Five beautiful Dutch Belted calves on pasture at Elvin Beiler's farm, Gap Road, Lancaster County.

Just fresh two year-old Dutch Belted heifer milking 80 pound with a very nice udder owned by Carey and Kathy Christ, located east of the Octorara High School in Chester County.

Since 1940 the Dutch Belted cattle have declined in numbers around the world so that now The American Livestock Breeds Conservancy, headquartered in Pittsboro, North Carolina, lists Dutch Belted cattle as one of the critically rare breeds of livestock with fewer than 200 registered cattle in the country. One major herd with a good pool of genetics was assembled by a prominent Florida physician. But his heirs had little interest in the cattle and put the herd into the government dairy buy-out program several years ago, causing even greater concern about the breed's eventual extinction.

But the trend toward rotational grazing and batch-calving may be the lifesaver for the Dutch Belted breed. Along with their distinctive color marking that is transmitted to the crossbred calves 90 percent of the time, the Dutch Belts are especially efficient in turning pasture into milk and meat, and they breed back quickly and without problems.

That's why Roman Stoltzfoos on Gap Road, to Christiana, in Lancaster County started breeding his Holsteins to registered Dutch Belted bulls. He and his family at Sunnydale Farms have been on a low input, rotational grazing farming program since 1992.

"We are not promoting it to others, but I'm interested in doing an extensive expirement," Roman said. "The advantages of the Dutch Belts are increased conception rates even when the cow is in top production. And they are 'grazing machines' that convert grass and hay to milk and meat much more efficiently than cows bred to stay in the barn and eat lush forage and a lot of grain. Even in hot weather you will see the Dutch Belts out grazing the meadows.

"You don't have to have 20,000 pounds of milk from a cow to make a decent profit if you drop your inputs like grain and keep flesh on the cows with grass and hay. We also want to raise all our bull calves for beef. And records show that Dutch Belted steers will gain three to four pounds per day on grass alone. They are also known for their longevity, staying in the herd for many lactations."

Stoltzfoos also belives the hybrid vigor that is inherent in crossbreeding will increase the profit potential of the Dutch Belt/Holstein cross. And a newly released study in Canada seems to lend credibility to this belief.

As reported in the April issue of The Red Bloodlines, the official publication of the National Red and White Dairy Cattle Association, a revolutionary crossbreeding study done from 1972 until 1989 involving over 3,000 cattle in five locations across Canada, showed a definite increase in profitability of crossbreeding. In this study it was shown that lifetime milk yield profitability, milk value, fat yield and protein yield increased from 10 to 12 percent in the crossbreds.

But for Arvid Kobosky, the current president of the Dutch Belted Cattle Association of America, Inc., and dairyman from North Alexandria in Westmoreland County, the reason for Dutch Belts in his conventional milking and dairy operation is their smaller size and fantastic conception rate.

"I have also liked the looks of Dutch Belts," Kobosky said. "But they need to milk if they stay in our herd. In addition, I like that they are not as big and do not tear up the stalls as much. And we have found that a small cow will outmilk a large cow almost every time."

And Kobosky's experience with milking Dutch Belts has proven him right. Starting with one Dutch Belted cow bought at an auction even before he knew where to find a breeding bull, Kobosky now has milking animals with DHIA records to back up his demand for production—19,000m, 4.2f, and

25 Orchardists To Participate In Early Weather Data Program

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Pennsylvania agriculture will take a leap into the 21st Century and become a national leader when 25 orchard growers begin participating in a project to give them daily weather information for use in the management of their orchards, according to Agriculture Secretary Charles C. Brosius.

The weather monitoring information will come directly to each grower via fax or computer modem, and will be specific to each of the 25 orchards.

The service, E-Weather, is being provided by a private firm, SkyBit Inc., through a cooperative effort of the State Agriculture Department, Penn State Cooperative Extension, the USDA Natural Resources Conservation Service, the Adams County Conservation District, the Pennsylvania Association of Conservation Districts and the International Apple Institute.

In addition to traditional weather variables such as temperature, precipitation, wind speed and direction, growers will receive forecasts and hourly data about agricultural-specific variables such as leaf wetness, degree days, and spraying and drying indicators.

"This unique project will provide important information to help the grower understand the relationship of the weather to the development of specific pests and diseases," Brosius said.

"The growers came to us and asked for assistance to take this important step in using computer-related technologies and electronic weather data," said James Starling, interim dean of the Pennsylvania State University College of Agricultural Sciences.

"Having accurate weather information in advance will allow growers to make educated decisions and properly prepare for pesticide treatments," Brosius said.

"With this new information, growers will be able to target their use of pesticides, which will be economically beneficial to the grower and will help protect the environment."

Brosius noted that this approach is part of Integrated Pest Management (IPM), which combines biological, cultural, genetic and chemical tools to control pest management problems. IPM promotes the use of effective alternate pest controls.

The Agriculture Department and the College of Agricultural Sciences have worked closely in implementing IPM in the commonwealth. The organizations cooperate on research, education and implementation of a wide variety of programs.

Funds to support the project come from a variety of sources. In the first year, grants and in-kind commercial support are underwriting the entire cost of the project as an incentive for participating growers. Growers will gradually assume the total cost over a three-year period.

The project is to be monitored throughout the season this year, making adjustments to ensure that the information is specific to the grower's needs. The economic impact will be evaluated at harvest.

Staff from the Penn State and the Agriculture Department will be available throughout the growing season to assist growers in interpreting the information they receive and provide other support as necessary.

The weather monitoring information is one part of a larger total resource management project that will lead to a comprehensive "One Plan" to help growers coordinate their management needs into one systematic plan for their acreage to maximize profitability.

Dutch Belted Cattle

3.3p for example. And while his Dutch Belted cattle, along with several breeds of cows, are only grazed parttime, The Dutch Belts are the first into the barn to be milked and the first to get to the feed bunks.

Kobosky also noted the 'exceptional fertility.' "If we have a cow that's hard to get bred back, we use Dutch Belt semen. And their unique color attracts people to our farm. We could easily sell every Dutch Belted animal we could get our hands on."

Unlike the grazers' and cross-breeders' reasons for using Dutch Belted cattle, Kobosky wants to develop purebred and registerable cattle. After the first cross, only Registered Dutch Belted bulls will be used. It takes five generations of pure Dutch Belted ancestry for a calf to be eligible for registry. However, if production, type, and color markings meet association requirements, they may be accepted in four generations.

Originally, breeders were not allowed to use anything but Holsteins for crossbreeding if they wanted to upgrade to register. But as of this year, the association has begun to allow crosses to any dairy breed as long as the sire is a registered Dutch Belt. Breeders should be cautious about using a Dutch Belted bull that is not registered if they plan to develop registered Dutch Belt bloodlines.

As farming operations change to meet the economic challenges of today, the animals that fit these new conditions may also change. And if you see cows and heifers in the pasture that have a white middle sandwiched between two black ends, you'll know this farmer is trying to find new ways to increase profitablilty.

On the other hand, this farmer may just have a sense of humor and get a kick out of milking black and white cookies.

Idea Garden Blooms Exotic At Farm And Home Center

ANDY ANDREWS

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.) — Here, you'll find Exotic Love, Painted Tongue, Cupid's Dart, and Canterbury Bells.

Sound like the titles of romance novels? Well, they aren't. They're exotic plants. And the only romance is the love Master Gardeners have for selecting and planting some beloved exotics chosen from seed catalogs and carefully grown for the 1996 Idea Garden on display at the Lancaster Farm and Home Center.

Early on Wednesday morning nearly a dozen Lancaster County Master Gardeners were busy removing plugs of some dainty flowering annuals and turning over the moist earth to allow the garden to come back to life.

"This year the Master Gardeners selected a lot of nonconventional type plants, many of which I suspect most homeowners have never seen," said Tim Elkner, county horticultural agent.

Hans Lienhard, chairperson of the Idea Garden Committee, was reviewing a "map" prepared on newsprint that detailed the location of plants such as Cupid's Dart (a vine plant, Catananche, containing a red flower). Lienhard also showed Elkner the root of a plant called 4 O'Clock, or Mirabilis, that grows to about two feet high, similar to a dahlia.

"There is a lot of material here that the Master Gardeners have grown in their gardens that will work in this area," said Elkner, including California poppy (botanical name Eshscholzia).

So how did they come by these gems? The Master Gardeners obtained seeds (at a cost of about $52) from several catalogs and contracted with a Strasburg nursery to grow them in flats. The nursery finished the plants — hoping to see how well they do at the Farm and Home Center.

Elkner said the cooler spring is leaving growth for plants lagging behind schedule about 10 days. For those who want to see the gardens in full bloom, with both the cool season and early warm season plants at their peak, come by the Farm and Home Center after the Lancaster Farming special Dairy Issue on June 1.

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — Reviewing the herd summary I and II, milk urea nitrogen, somatic cell and the reproduction reports were the highlights of the annual technician spring conferences.

The technicians learned statistical goals as well as defining financial information from the finished reports that Pa. DHIA offers back to the dairymen.

Currently the membership receives same-day test Westfalia Dairy Plan reports along with several other reports mailed back after the milk components are tested at the Pa. DHIA lab.

Milk urea nitrogen testing was covered in depth. Pa. DHIA offers a unique report that specializes in showing lactations, groups as well as days in milk. Using a format like this allows for easier interpretations.

This can be extremely useful to vets, feed consultants, nutritionists and extension agents. Milk urea nitrogen testing can be added to the options for only an additional 15 cents per cow.

The new nutrition program was discussed along with the different benefits a dairyman can receive from the program. This program allows the member to report up to 13 feeds with the luxury of reporting four individual feeds per cow. Pasture can also be reported in 12 different ways to accommodate the members who utilize rotational grazing.

Ask your Pa. DHIA technician to sign you up today, at no additional cost, for the new nutrition program.

JUNE IS DAIRY MONTH

Most of the plants aren't readily available in local garden centers or nurseries, unfortunately. Like many areas in the state, growers often want the standard geraniums and petunias, because of their hardiness, their early flowering, and their predictable growth, according to Elkner.

Also, the cool weather will slow down the growth and flowering of some of the exotics. But when warm weather arrives, many should blossom really nicely. Even some of the more common plants such as the vinca won't be fully blooming until the weather warms up.

Sometime in the summer, the Master Gardeners will open their home gardens to tours.

Also, the Master Gardeners are planning a plant "mailbox" on site at the Farm and Home Center. The mailbox, near the Idea Garden itself, will house information for those who tour the garden that will describe what is grown and how to care for individual plants.

Also planted this year are the Palm Springs Daisy, the Cigar Plant, Vipers Buglass, Mexican Tulip Poppy, Sunflower, Tidy Tips, Mallow Wort, Flowering Maple, Rock Parslave, Morning Glory, Twin Spur, Cup Flower, and Zinnia.

for 28 years in the Harrisburg area. For many years the family has consistently supported the 4-H lamb clubs by purchasing many of the lambs at the Farm Show auction and selling those lambs to customer satisfaction at each of the four stores.

Fox indicated that each store is different with different clientele — and the lamb is marketing that way in the stores.

Fox provided some helpful information to assist local growers in marketing and selling their lambs successfully to independent retailers. He also provided some of the in-house store lamb promotion strategies he uses.

"The stir fry demonstrations have been terrifically succcessful," said Fox. He indicated that they have been very proud of the stir fry promotions and other sampling demonstrations the stores have provided over the years and continues to be happy to support the 4-H program.

Fox's is looking for large lamb dressweights, 55-60 pounds or even better. "I would like to have the opportunity to buy those lambs," he said. "I would like to be able to buy carcasses that size if they were young and quality lambs."

He would rather have the carcass lambs over the boxed lambs because they can hold up in the case better.

The store trims the meat to ¼ inch size or less. "That's what customers want," said Fox.

Most of the beef sold in the Fox stores, he said, has "no external fat" and by turning out that "user-friendly beef," he admitted that he often sees 85 cents to $1 per pound profit.

Fox noted the importance of the "beautiful" in-store display kit provided by the American Lamb Council. The display features recipes, stickers advertising lamb, and other items that are attractive to consumers.

Fox noted that lamb is the lowest percentage of profit on meats obtained in the store, compared to the highest, beef.

Overall, from roasters to the choice cuts, Fox said he nets about 50 cents a pound on average on beef (about 8 cents a pound on roasters and about $1 on the best cuts). That is close to 30 percent margin. For pork, he averages about 30 cents per pound profit and 20 cents per pound for chicken. For the lamb, the margin falls to only a 23 percent margin, at best, but averages around 13 percent, much less than beef, pork, or chicekn.

The key, Fox told the producers, is to get the "actual store managers to participate" in the promotions, which help boost sales. At the store's demonstrations the market distributes the brochure, "Fox's 1992 Recipes for 4-H Lambs."

One of the most successful promotions has been using recipe stickers and fixing them right to the product package. These stickers are available from the American Lamb Council.

"In-store demonstrations to me really are the best way to promote lamb. Sampling is a big part of getting lamb (sold in stores)."

Dr. Bill Henning, Penn State extension meat specialist, said that U.S. lamb consumption is "going one way — straight down."

What is happening? Apparently, lamb is available, but in large part because of the huge amount (90 percent of total processed lamb) imported each year from Australian and New Zealand.

In 1995, Henning noted, the U.S. imported 27,000 metric tons of lamb. While adding stability to the lamb market for consumers, for domestic producers it has been a nightmare.

Why? Domestic lamb is the thing of the past, experts have been saying, because it is simply too fat.

About 99 out of 100 restaurants that serve rack of lamb obtain it from Australian markets because of its consistent leanness.

Henning showed one package of lamb chops picked up at a well-advertised many-complex supermarket chain all over southeastern Pennsylvania. Sixty percent of it is bone and fat sold at $7.68 per pound.

Producers have tried to make lamb too much like beef, said Henning. It's been taken out of the pasture and put in the feedlot and fed lots of corn, contributing to the downfall of the domestic lamb industry.

While many ethnic groups prefer the grain-fed lamb and are adamant about it, it has been the western lamb producers that have caused a "lot of problems" in the country.

He recently saw some lamb out of Sioux Falls, S.D. that had about "one inch of backfat and no legs.

"We have to change that kind of mentality, and to figure out how to reach the consumer," said Henning.

Consumers must be taught how to eliminate the myths of domestic lamb from their thinking, including concerns that it tastes too much like mutton, that lamb is subject to predators, and that disease is a factor. Pennsylvania has a viable lamb industry that could package the product similar to the carryout meals now for sale in markets near Philadelphia. Consumers spend $9.99 and carry out a fresh, high quality dinner for two, which can feature some of the best lamb produced locally.

Value can be added to various cuts of lamb that could transfer to profit for the producer and the retailer, according to Henning.

United Ag Service Holds Annual Meeting

SENECA FALLS, N.Y. — United Ag Services Annual Meeting was held recently at the Holiday Inn, Horseheads, NY. The meeting was conducted by President J.W. Welsh of Mainesburg, PA. In his President's report Welsh stated that he was encouraged with the growth in membership and milk volume that has been made by the cooperative in 1995. Because much of the growth occurred during the last part of the year this increased volume will continue into 1996. Welsh attributed much of the growth to the recruitment of new members to the organization by the staff, officers and producers. He also stated that United Ag Services's member cooperative participate in strong milk markets which will remain so through 1996, while maintaining a premium level which is above the average in the northeast. One area of concern Welsh brought up was the supply and cost of feed grains in relation to how they would affect milk production over the next few months. He said he was encouraged by predictions that the price of milk could be somewhat higher in 1996 than in 1995.

United Ag Services's Cooperative CEO, James E. Patsos, in his report highlighted the fact that the continuing growth in both co-op membership and volume, management services to other agricultural organizations, and ever increasing efficiencies of United management and staff have allowed operations to continue without increasing producer dues.

Rapidly changing market conditions were addressed by Patsos. In seeking to enhance their bottom line handlers are more and more contracting with large cooperatives to supply all theior milk needs instead of carrying their own independent producers. This is a means of balancing their milk purchases while freeing them from the costs that go with providing check writing, quality control, and reporting for their farmers shippers. Patsos then mentioned some unknowns which may affect future milk supply and price. Feed costs and uncertainty about the farm bill currently in the House-Senate Conference Committee are some of that could influence the profitability of dairying and are important considerations. He related that United's member cooperatives have benefitted from some of the best markets over the last several years. In order to preserve these markets United's Directors have entered into a longer term agreement with milk handlers. These agreements will allow the cooperative to maintain its premiums and member services, while giving the opprtunity to continue to grow in cooperative membership and volume.

He stressed that membership is the life blood of United. Their market demands more milk production. Since the future is cloudy regarding the number of dairy sell-outs there may be in the northeast, United must continue to strive for additional members in order to keep up with the demands of the market. He added, "I congratulate the members on their ever increasing milk quality. The cooperatives' refusal to accept members who produce poor quality and releasing producers who refuse to be quality producers-makes their members' milk more marketable."

Richard P. Smith, CEO of Dairylea Cooperative, Inc., based in Syracuse, NY, was the guest speaker.

Directors elected at the meeting were Laverne McCarty, Forksville, of Scenic Mountain Cooperative, Hubert Dinniny, Addison Cooperative, Leslie Gilbert, Pitcher, NY, of Otselic Valley Cooperative, and Directors-at-Large Roland Schallenberg, Westernville, NY and James G. Patsos, Waterloo, NY.

United's Directors met following the Annual Meeting. Officers elected were J.W. Welsh, Mainsburg, president, Robert Nichols, Addison, NY, vice president, Leslie Gilbert, Pitcher, NY, secretary, and Roalnd Schallenberg, Westernville, NY.

United Ag Services, located in Seneca Falls, NY, provides marketing, quality control, accounting, and payroll services for small to medium sized agricultural organizations and individual farmers.

Minimal Grain Reductions Required For Lactating Cows

VIRGINIA ISHLER
Dept. Dairy/Animal Science
Penn State

High grain costs have led many producers to believe that they need to cut back on grain levels. This is not necessarily true. Feed grain according to both grain and milk prices.

This year may be remembered for having the largest increase in grain prices, modest changes in milk prices, and a farm bill being passed with some of the most dramatic changes to occur ever in milk pricing. This scenario requires each dairy producer to check that the amounts of grain being fed in the herd are tailored to his/her own feed and milk prices, grain and forage inventories, and herd goals. The dairy producer needs to take information given on the latest milk check statement and the current costs of feed on a per hundred weight basis and determine the grain to milk price ratio. This will check if adjustments are necessary in grain feeding levels based on the economics of the individual farm operation.

Information needed to calculate the grain to milk price ratio for the month of March.

[1] Recommended amounts of grain assume that the ration program is balanced and is meeting at least 100% of the animals' nutrient requirements.

The grain to milk price ratio provides a means from which to properly adjust grain feeding levels to the economic situation without going overboard and reducing grain too drastically. The grain to milk price ratio is calculated by dividing the grain price by the net farm price for 4% FCM. In the example being used this would come to $10.25 + $13.56 = 0.76. Table 1 lists the adjustment factors to use for determining if grain amounts need to be adjusted. The grain to milk price ratio of 0.76 equates to an adjustment factor of nearly 1.00 (Table 1). The present level of grain being fed times 1.00 results in no change in grain feeding rates. In this particular situation, based on the milk price and feed price, no adjustment is warranted in grain levels.

If the 18% grain mix had been $11.25/cwt. with the same milk price ($11.25 + $13.56 = 0.83), the grain to milk price ratio of 0.83 would equate to an adjustment factor of 0.91 (Table 1). For example, if the recommended amount of grain to feed was 20 pounds as-fed, the adjusted grain level now would be 20 x 0.91 = 18 pounds or two pounds less grain per cow per day. When the situation arises where less grain feeding may be warranted based off of the milk and grain prices, then there are some important items to consider.

- Consult with a nutritionist to be certain that the ration is properly balanced for protein, protein fractions, carbohydrates and minerals if grain is going to be reduced.
- Full feed at least one forage or TMR so that animals may overcome part of the reduced energy intake from grain by increased forage or TMR consumption. An important point for success is that the forage quality contains an NEL content of .62 Mcal/lb. of dry matter or higher.
- Gradually decrease grain intake by one-half pound per head daily. Generally cows consume about 60 pounds more forage dry matter intake for each pound of grain removed from the diet. Cows can compensate for some of the decrease in energey intake if the forage energy level is sufficient.
- Check the profitability of grain reductions by comparing returns over feed costs before and after the change. A change in feeding should be reflected in milk production within 48 hours. Avoid making drastic changes at any one time.
- Any appreciable decrease in grain level can decrease body condition score more than usual. This should not be a problem in the short-term. However, grain amounts still need to be tailored for cows that are too thin for their current stage of lactation. Late lactation animals still need to be in good body condition for entering the dry period.

The best plan in overcoming tightening profit margins is to make decisions based off of both milk and grain prices. Consult with a nutritionist before making changes in feeding levels and/or feed ingredient substitutions or deletions from the ration. This can help reduce any unnecessary adverse effects on animal production or performance.

Dairy Agent

Are you confident that the water that you, your family and your animals drink every day is safe and will not cause problems? Water should be tested yearly for bacteria and nitrates and every 3 years for items such as sulfates, total dissolved solids and pH. I will discuss some of the standards that are acceptable for humans as well as livestock.

Total Coliform Bacteria: The presence of coliform bacteria is an indication that the water has been contaminated by sewage or manure. Most coliform bacteria do not cause disease, but they can cause digestive and intestinal problems. Acceptable limit < 1 coliform/100 ml.

Nitrates: Excessive nitrates in the water can be the result of groundwater contamination from manure and fertilizers. They can cause blue baby syndrome; therefore, pregnant women and babies under 6 months of age should not drink water high in nitrates. Acceptable limit 10 mg./liter of N03-N or 45 mg./liter of N03.

pH: A pH less than 6.5 or greater than 8 can cause corrosion problems in plumbing, shorten pipe life and introduce dissolved metals into the water supply. Acceptable range 6.5 to 8.

Sulfates and Total Dissolved Solids: Excessive concentrations can cause gastro-intestinal problems. Acceptable limits 250 mg./liter of sulfates and 500 mg./liter for total dissolved solids.

Hardness: Hard water causes soap and scaly deposits in plumbing and decreased cleaning action of soaps and detergents. It will also shorten the life of hot water heating units. Water over 7.5 grains per gallon may need softening.

Livestock Consumption

A 1,350-pound Holstein cow producing 60 pounds of milk with a 3.7 percent fat test and consuming 43 pounds of dry matter will drink approximately 24 gallons of water per day.

Heifers at 18 months will consume 6-7 gallons per day and 4-month-old calves can drink 3-3.5 gallons in a day.

Now it doesn't make much sense to feed top quality forage and fine-tune the ration and then give your animals poor quality water — the cheapest ingredient in the entire ration.

The point where contaminants cause problems with livestock varies somewhat from humans consumption standards.

The water quality standards discussed are the most important ones and there are solutions to most of the problems, although some may be expensive. First get your water tested so that you can determine what, it anything, needs to be done. Treatment options are available from Extension offices and experienced water treatment business.

Item		Possible Cattle Problems
Total Coliforms	Calves	over 1 per 100 ml.
	Cows	over 15-50 per 100 ml.
Total Bacteria		over 1 million per 100 ml.

	114-227 ppm	shortness of breath, rapid breathing
	over 227 ppm	signs of suffocation, incoordination, staggering and death

Controlling Dairy Production Costs

GEORGE F.W. HAENLEIN
Extension Dairy Specialist
University of Delaware

NEWARK, Del. — We've bemoaned the fact for years: As dairy farmers, we don't control our own destiny.

Very few businesses are told by a federal administrator what price they will receive for their product. Rather than what we as producers think we should receive as fair compensation for our hard work, the price we get for our milk has little relationship to our production costs.

While I agree with the national policy of reasonably low-priced food for consumers, why must dairy farmers pay for it?

How can dairy farmers stay in business and keep the farm in the family when the milk price paid to them is equal to or lower than the costs of milk production?

The only influence any dairy farmer has over milk price is when he or she sells retail some or all of the milk and/or its products.

Too often dairy farmers' contracts with a milk marketing cooperative don't include a clause allowing some retailing of their milk in the form of farm-bottled milk, farm yogurt or farm cheese. So renegotiate the contract!

A number of farmers have turned to retailing in recent years and have had great success. In fact, making farm cheese is a new phenomenon on the U.S. farm scene. The success of these ventures is evident in the increasing volume of sales.

The now 10-year-old American Cheese Society assists in promoting such efforts with national cheese shows, conferences, workshops and judging contests nationwide.

Another major influence over dairy farm income is production costs. The biggest item? Almost half of all milk production costs is the feed.

To control feed costs, consider all the alternative options. Where can you get the cheaper nutritious feeding ration for dairy cows, dairy goats and dairy sheep without sacrificing nutrient content, palatability, freshness, freedom from mold and other detrimental compounds? How can you get the same feed at a volume discount?

When I changed the University of Delaware dairy feeding system from the delivery of bagged concentrate feed to bulk, I gained a nice discount. And when I built a bigger holding bin so that I could order concentrate feed in 20-ton truckloads instead of in 12-ton loads, I got another fine discount, reducing my feed costs substantially.

Then I went to 12-month feed-delivery contracts at a constant price and constant formula, using forward price predictions of the grain exchange, which means I save even more money. Any farmer can do the same thing.

Finally, I switched to computerized concentrate feeding of all our cows, heifers and calves, including milk nursing, this system gave me ultimate control over feed costs, because I now feed concentrates only as much to each animal as each one deserves — not too much for the fat and low milkers and not too little for the high and skinny milkers.

And I don't have to worry about building barn partitions to subdivide my herd into high, medium and low milkers. The computer does this for me.

I segregate only the dry cows, and three weeks before calving, they get computerized feeding rations with the appropriate increases.

What else can farmers do to control costs? Substitute some concentrate with good-quality forages, haylage from alfalfa or clover, early-cut hay, good pasture in rotation and cold-season forages in this region.

This will require some mobile electric fence, but this is often cheaper than the concentrate ration.

I've never heard a concentrate feed dealer promote pasture programs (of course not!), but some dairy farmers are rediscovering pastures — something that went out of style about 20 years ago. Now those farmers are laughing all the way to the bank.

Take full advantage of the nutrient savings from quality good forages. To maximize the effectiveness of forages, test the nutrient contents of the forages regularly and often. Then tailor the concentrate ration accordingly and save.

Other production costs can be controlled also; pounds of milk per hour milking, and pounds of milk for all cows — not just the milkers but the dry cows, too.

The more milk per hour milking, the less the cost of labor for milking. The more milk per all cows, the less the cost for keeping dry cows.

This reflects, then, on the farmer's ability to get cows bred on time and regularly without much repeat breeding. The barometer is the average days-in-milk for the herd. Any days beyond mid-lactation at 150 days mean cows are beyond peak lactation.

They decrease daily toward the end of lactation and cost more money for less milk just as in early lactation. The reason is the inability to get cows bred in time after last calving! This is a fruitful "fertile" area where farmers can control costs to improve farm income.

Late pregnancy is a very difficult time for cows, during which they often reduce their feed intake more than is good for them. Cows that are too fat or too skinny have lots of problems after calving.

A recent Purdue University study showed that cows with problems after calving usually had lower feed intake during the time before calving.

They concluded that "if cows are not aggressive eaters prior to calving, they are not going to be aggressive eaters after calving. Consequently they will have poor milk production and more complications."

Early lactation is a time of high nutrient demand, and milk production tends to increase more than the feed intake. Purdue researchers strongly recommend maximizing feed intake during the transition period.

Finally, a study in Kansas with 402 DHIA herds divided into three production levels) 14,000, 19,000 and 23,000 pounds of milk per cow per year — showed that higher production is not necessarily automatically detrimental to reproductive regularity and efficiency.

It's true that the higher-producing herds had more services per conception than the lower-producing herds; however, in terms of percent cows not bred after 120 days after calving, the high herds showed the smallest percentage.

Avoid wasting of expensive grain. Cows in late lactation with good body condition can often get by with minimal grain.

• Bottom Line. The bottom line is that grain feeding for high producing cows on pasture results in higher DMI which translates into higher, profitable milk production and improved body condition. Based on this information and our research at Penn State, the grain feeding guidelines in the following table have been developed.

The amount of grain or supplement to feed depends on the "manager's eye" when monitoring daily milk production and body condition. Recording average daily milk production per cow can be an excellent management tool to monitor the effectiveness of the feeding program and quality of pasture. Work with your nutritionist in developing this supplemental feeding program. We have developed a list of sample rations.

Please call or write if your would like a copy.

One last though: Remember that many factors contribute to your bottom line, and a short term savings in feed costs may translate into long term expense if cow health, reproductive efficiency, body condition, and milk production are not optimized.

Grain (DM) feeding guidelines for a grass based pasture system during the spring grazing season[ab]

4% FCM Production (lb)	lb. grain	Grain:Milk[c]
>80	16-20	1:4 to 1:5
70	14-18	1:4 to 1:5
60	11-14	1:5
50	7-10	1:5 to 1:6
<40	5-7	1:6 to 1:7

[a]Assume 1300 lb. bodyweight
[b]These guidelines are based on high quality grass pasture available in adequate quantities assuming the approximate DMI. Lower quality forage will require more grain. Maximum grain DM fed should be equivalent to about 2% of bodyweight. Some adjustment of grain should be made based on body condition scores and stage of lactation. Lower amounts are likely needed when the pasture contains legumes.

Pro Ag Urges Support Of Dairy Compact

MESHOPPEN (Wyoming Co.) — Dennis Boyanowski, President of the Progressive Agriculture Organization (Pro Ag) urges all farm organizations to accelerate their support of the Northeast Dairy Compact.

Boyanowski, a dairy farmer from Laceyville, reported today that Pro Ag will continue to consider any options that will improve prices to all dairy farmers.

The Compact is a legal entity in all 6 New England States and recently was added to the New Farm Bill which passed Congress and was signed into law by President Clinton.

According to Arden Tewksbury, Manager of Pro Ag, the compact allows the six New England States to form a dairy commission which will have the authority to hold hearings and establish milk prices for fluid milk within the six states. Also, any milk produced outside of those states and consumed for fluid purposes in New England would also command a higher price.

However, the compact can only move forward if U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Glickman determines there is compelling evidence illustrating the need of the compact.

The Pro Ag Officials claim with the severe economic conditions facing all dairy farmers, The Secretary should have no reservations about allowing the compact to move forward.

The federal legislation allows six additional states to join the compact. They are Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania.

Tewksbury said, "Once Secretary Glickman makes his determination, then we must work with state legislators in passing legislation to allow these states to join the compact individually."

Tewksbury said the task in joining the compact will not be easy.

First, a new state wanting to join the compact must border on a state that is an existing member of the compact.

Second, the legislators in each state must pass the needed legislation and must be signed by the governor of each state.

After this takes place then each state's application must be approved in Washington.

Ohio University Announces Effective Teat Dip

WOOSTER, Ohio — Mastitis costs Ohio dairy farmers more money than any other disease — an estimated $200 per cow per year.

That's why Ohio State University scientists Joseph S. Hogan and K. Larry Smith continue to test new control methods. One of these methods is a teat dip containing .55 percent chlorhexidine gluconate.

In a recent study, the chlorhexidine dip worked as well as a commonly used type — one with 1 percent iodophor — in preventing intramammary infection and mastitis.

With this finding, dairy farmers have a new, proven weapon for use against environmental mastitis, which is harder to control than contagious mastitis. Environmental mastitis is caused by microbes around the cow, barn and bedding.

"We need to have teat dips put on the market that have been tested for efficacy," said Smith, study co-author and professor of animal sciences.

"What we did was to provide a testing ground." Smith and Hogan work on the Wooster campus of the Ohio Agricultural Research and Development Center.

The research is in a recent issue of the Journal of Dairy Science.

Mastitis is an inflammation of the mammary gland. The disease occurs when a microorganism gets into the mammary gland and the cow's immune system responds. Milk composition changes, and manufacturing properties can suffer, the milk might be less suitable for making cheese, taste bad or even have clots.

One of the best ways to prevent mastitis is using teat dips before and after milking. This prevents the spread of microorganisms from cow to cow.

The scientists studied 125 cows for 12 months under normal dairy management conditions. The cows experienced natural exposure to mastitis-causing microorganisms. The scientists compared how well the two teat dips prevented mastitis.

As it turned out, both dips had pros and cons. The chlorhexidine dip was more effective against some types of microorganisms, while the iodophor dip was more effective against others. For still other types of microorganisms, the two dips worked the same.

What does that tell farmers? That the chlorhexidine dip can be used in a mastitis prevention program — and should help.

"We're working to assure the producer that there are products out there that have been tested for efficacy," Smith said.

In addition to using a teat dip, Smith suggested these basic points for preventing mastitis:

- Use dry cow therapy. Infuse all quarters of the udder with a specially formulated antibiotic preparation of the end of lactation. This treats current infections and helps prevent future infections.
- Make sure milking equipment is clean and working well.
- Treat clinical mastitis cases with antibiotics.
- Cull or eliminate cows that have persistent or recurring intramammary infections or mastitis problems.
- Keep the environment clean and dry.
- Feed rations with enough vitamin E and selenium. They reduce mastitis by helping to increase the cow's natural resistance.

National Dairy Shrine promotes the future by sponsoring an annual student recognition contest for university seniors who plan to work in the dairy industry. Along with Dairy Management Inc., it also sponsors three scholarships for undergraduates who plan to work in dairy marketing or processing.

Each year participants in the National Intercollegiate and National Post-Secondary Dairy Cattle Judging contest are honored with free membership in Dairy Shrine, courtesy of Hoffmann-LaRoche Inc.

And participants in the National 4-H Dairy Quiz Bowl receive lifetime memberships courtesy of Kraft Foods Inc.

National Dairy Shrine recognizes the dairy industry's present by naming a dairy industry guest of honor and a distinguished dairy cattle breeder each year.

It also provides dairy fellowship at its annual awards banquet held each year at World Dairy Expo.

To honor the past, National Dairy Shrine recognizes three or four dairy industry pioneers each year. And it preserves history by videotaping interviews with past and present leaders of the dairy industry.

The National Dairy Shrine Visitor's Center and Museum at Fort Atkinson, Wis., also ties together the past, present and future of the dairy industry with its computerized audio-visual exhibits, numerous dairy artifacts, and special displays highlighting the history of the artificial insemination industry, DHIA, butter making, and the national breed shows. It also serves as a gallery for all award recipients.

The Visitors' Center and Museum is open, free of charge, Tuesday through Saturday and every Sunday from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. through Nov. 1.

Tours can be arranged at other times by contacting the Hoard's Dairyman office at (414) 563-5551.

To be a part of National Dairy Shrine takes a $50 lifetime membership.

New members receive a lapel pin, a wall plaque, and the Dairy Shrine newsletter twice each year. To join, contact Secretary/Treasurer James Leuenberger, 100 MBC Drive, Shawano, WI 54166. Phone (715) 526-2141.

Emu Processing Seminar

BLOOMSBURG (Columbia Co.) — The Pennsylvania Emu Farmers' Association this week announced it is serving as host for a processing seminar today at the state Farm Show Complex in Harrisburg, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The general public is invited, as well as all processing facility owners.

Guest speakers are to be Fran Bidelspach, with the Pa. Department of Agriculture Bureau of Market Development. Bidelspach is to discuss state regulations regarding processing of emu for commercial use.

Also scheduled to speak is John Sworen, compliance officer with the USDA, and Jerry Ely, also of the USDA.

The purpose of the seminar is to help educate members of PEFA and interested processing facilities on regulations governing the processing of emu within the state, and nationally.

As consumer awareness expands, PEFA expects increased demand for the meat, described as low fat and low cholesterol.

PEFA also reports that there are companies incorporating emu oil into personal care product lines. The emu-promotion organization also stated that several processing plants in Pennsylvania have "shown an interest in becoming a part of this rapidly growing agriculture entity and now need to learn the necessary procedures to process."

For more information, call (215) 234-8174. Preregistration is required, according to the news release.

Wisconsin Dairy Farmers Attempt To Form Raw Milk Pricing Co-op

MADISON, Wis. — A group of dairy farmers has begun holding meetings in Wisconsin in support of a new organization called the American Raw Milk Producers Pricing Cooperative, according to a new release from organizers.

Organizers include independent dairy farmers as well as members of Upper Midwest Milk Producers Association, Family Farm Defenders, Farm Unity Alliance, National Farmers Organization, Farmers Union, Farm Bureau, Wisconsin Rural Development Center, Ag Price, and Catholic Rural Life.

Similar meetings have been held among farm groups in Texas, California, Indiana, New York, Missouri and New Mexico.

Three Wisconsin dairy farmers borrowed $5,000 from the Cazevonia Bank (Cazenovia, Wisconsin) to retain attorney Marvin Beshore and begin drawing up a charter for the raw milk pricig agency.

Francis Goodman (Wonewoc), John Kinsman (La Valle), and Jim McGhee (Hollandale) mortgaged against their farms on March 17 to start a national pricing cooperative organized under the 1922 Capper-Volstead Act.

When up and running, the cooperative intends to act as a pricing agency for member farms. They new co-op will own no milk plants and process no dairy products. Its only purpose will be to set a fair farm milk price, according to organizers.

"The job of the pricing co-op will simply be to establish a base milk price for milk producers," said John Kinsman.

"Members will have a legally empowered organization to collectively bargain for higher milk prices from milk plants. The already existing dairy cooperatives do not collectively bargain for higher farm milk prices, even though they are empowered to do so under the 1922 Capper-Volstead Act. Co-ops receive and process 85 percent of domestic milk; that is almost triple the market share needed to keep farm milk prices apace with rising costs of production. It's a mystery to everyone why they have not, insteady of idly watching hundreds of thousands of dairy farms go out of business. We're not waiting for them any longer. As farmers across the country join this new organization, milk plants with either pay fair prices or lose their milk to other plants."

Marvin Beshore, an attorney with Milspaw & Beshore in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, is recognized as one of three or four foremost legal experts on Capper-Volstead laws, according to organizers.

Raised on a dairy farm in York County, Pennsylvania, Beshore graduated from Georgetown Law School in 1976 and has spent the majority of his professional life involved with Capper-Volstead and agricultural regulation. He met with area farmers on April 1, in Madison, Wisconsin in the law offices of Charles Van Sickle, where intital work has begun on setting up the pricing agency.

"There are many powerful interests that have benefited over the years from huge supplies of cheap farm milk," said Jim McGhee, and organizer. "There will be challenges against any attempt to change that. One of the first will no doubt be against our right to even attempt raising farm prices, so we thought to cover that by including someone recognized by everyone in his field."

State Farmlands Approved For Preservation

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Agriculture Secretary Charles C. Brosius announced the approval of easement purchases for 15 farms encompassing 2,060 acres of prime farmland.

"Farms in nine counties will be protected for future generations as a result of today's actions by the State Agricultural Land Preservation Board," said Brosius, who chairs the board.

The Farmland Protection Program was initiated in 1989 with a $100 million bond issue approved by Pennsylvania voters. The program allows the state and counties to purchase development rights — referred to as easements — to guarantee that farms remain agricultural land.

Including easements approved today, 610 farms in 31 counties will have joined the program or had easements approved, protecting 76,248 acres.

Following is a list of the 15 properties approved today, including owner, township, acreage and purchase cost.

Dairy Shrine Video Chronicles History

SHAWANO, Wis. — The history of the U.S. dairy industry is presented in a colorful, fast-paced video documentary recently produced by the Dairy Shrine.

The new video draws extensively from the Shrine's film and still photography archive and treats the viewer to a tour of the exhibits featured in the Dairy Shrine museum in Fort Atkinson, Wis.

"In this 41-minute walk through the heritage of the U.S. dairy industry, viewers become acquainted with those who paved the way," said Janice Keene, Dairy Shrine president. "The video recognizes some of the challenges facing the industry of today and profiles some current industry leaders."

The Dairy Shrine, founded at the 1949 Dairy Cattle Congress in Waterloo, Iowa, has four specific objectives, and they form the framework for this video.

The four objectives of Dairy Shrine are recognizing dairy leaders of today, honoring dairy leaders of the past, inspiring dairy leaders of the future, and recording the history of dairying.

Today, the Shrine makes its permanent home at the museum site in Fort Atkinson.

Annual winners of the Dairy Shrine Guest of Honor, Distinguished Breeder, Klussendorf Award, Kildee Scholarship and Intercollegiate Judging Team Contest are highlighted in the video.

Some recipients of the Pioneer Award, which honors those who made important contributions to the industry in the last century, are also featured.

Copies of the video are available for $21.95, plus $2.50 shipping and handling, by writing to: Dairy Shrine, 21st Century Genetics, 100 MBC Drive, Shawano, WI 54166.

"This video truly is a must addition to the library of everyone interested in the history of the U.S. dairy industry," Kenne said.

add to the cost of hauling agricultural commodities, of which most of the cost is borne by producers.

According to a news release from Indiana U.S. Sen. Richard Lugar, who pushed hard to dissassemble federal production controls (i.e. promoting overproduction and purchasing and storing surplus in order to maintain low commodity prices.) in creating the 1996 Farm Bill, he met Wednesday with President Bill Clinton, U.S. Secretary of Agriculutre Dan Glickman and congressional leaders to figure out a way to help beef producers.

In his news release, Sen. Lugar proposed that the low cattle prices can be expected to continue until the first corn crop is harvested, about four months away.

"Obviously this is an emergency feed problem that can't be remedied immediately simply because you have a growing season that has to take place."

He said a bipartisan effort could help, and he provided his synopsis of what the administration has said it would do, though an official statement from the USDA was not available by presstime.

According to Sen. Lugar, U.S. Agriculture Secretary Glickman announced a five-point plan for helping the cattle industry.

That plan includes permitting the nation's livestock producers to graze cattle on land enrolled in the Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) and to cut hay on that land starting July 1 until Sept. 30, except for the most environmentally sensitive land.

That also carries with it the provision that farmers who opt to graze and hay their CRP land are to sacrifice 5 percent of their annual CRP rental payment for each month they graze.

The plan also is to include using every tool available to promote the export of American beef, as well as pressing the World Trade Organization for a resolution of the complaint the United States has had against the European Union for its ban on importing United States beef because of the hormones used.

Ironically, among beef producers illegal hormone (the hormones used in U.S. beef has been shown to be safe) use has mostly been rumored to be linked to non-U.S. produced beef, and the EU stance has been seen as a protectionist measure.

On top of that, with the recent human health scare in the United Kingdom about bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE) and the rejection of British beef it might be expected that the United States would otherwise be able to supply those markets.

However, that situation apparently has not been fully developed.

To help, Glickman is to immediately start the USDA beef purchase program for the 1996-97 school year, spending up to $50 million and to consider additional purchases later, depending on the market situation, according to Lugar.

Additionally, the USDA is to survey the credit needs of livestock producers and report back to the president within 30 days to see if loan leniency should be called for.

And finally, Glickman is reportedly to meet with livestock producers and industry representatives to monitor how effective the steps taken have been and to determine what other steps may be necessary.

According to H. Louis Moore, Penn State University Extension commercial agriculture economist, the high feed price situation is not expected to let up soon.

He said Thursday that corn prices can be expected to remain high for at least two years, as well as can the price for other grains, because of increased domestic and world demand and because of weather-related production cuts.

Earlier in the year he talked about the disappearance of record carryover of corn in recent years because of exporting and additional uses for corn.

With carryover from last year estimated low, and with demand estimated strong, Moore said he heard that Glickman has suggested that grain supplies/prices may not recover for 10 years.

Wheat prices especially have been surging, because of poor condition of overwintering crop, expected to fulfill the market demand.

"It's an unsusal situation and apparently the (wheat) crop in the West is coming off a lot worse than anybody anticipated," Moore said Thursday. "I don't have full information, but 50 percent of the crop in Kansas has been rated poor to very poor.

"We've been hearing a lot of reports from Texas to Kansas — in the whole wheat belt — that the wheat is so bad, many people who are turning down wheat to plant sorghum say they haven't done so in the past 25 to 30 years," Moore said.

The situation is apparently real this year, Moore said, instead of just a scare rumor that investors can usually be depended upon to spread to affect the future's market.

"Normally we get all these scary reports this time of year," Moore said, "but apparently this year they are pretty accurate. I think they are thinking the wheat crop will be low — about 2 billion bushels, of hard and soft. Last year it was around 2.2 billion bushels."

According to Moore, the projection of wheat harvest is the lowest in the decade, and during a year when exporting is to pick up.

"Our drought year of 1988 it was 1.8 billion bushels, but then in 1992 it was 2.46 billion, and in 1993, 2.42 billion bushels, and in 1994 2.32 billion bushels.

"So if (production) falls below 2 billion bushels it will certainly be different than at any time in the 1990s, and of course we have used up our reserves."

He said that the current estimate is that on June 1 the nation might have a carryover of only 300 million bushels on hand when new crop begins to enter the supply market.

Moore compared that to June 1 carryover levels in 1995 of 456 million bushels, and 549 million in 1994.

Even with the short crop in 1988, there was carryover from 1987 which had 820 million bushels in reserve.

"Even with the short crop in 1988, it wasn't nearly as harmful because of carryover, but if we have a short crop this year and only have 300 million in carryover, I think that we will have a record low (of wheat supply)," Moore said.

Moore said that strong domestic use and good exporting along with the tight supplies cause him to believe we are not going to get back to normal prices in any commodities for at least two years.

While not good news for the livestock industry, it is good news for grain producers.

Moore said he doesn't expect food prices to increase because most of the growth in use for grains has been in "value-added" products and not in basics such as bread. He said that even if manufacturers doubled the amount of wheat used in a loaf of bread, it shouldn't much change the price.

He said that even if food prices rise, he expects only a 3- to 4-percent increase. Though some have been predicting increases of 7- to 8-percent, Moore said he doesn't think there is enough data to support such a prediction.

On top of it, fuel price increases can be expected to complicate matters. The combination could possibly spark inflation, something definetly not desired in a presidential election year.

A proposed elimination of a 4-cent federal gas tax tied in with an increase in minimum wage isn't expected to have much impact on agriculture, according to Moore. Others disagree.

More importantly, Moore said, "The short and the long term effect of the Farm Bill should encourage farmers to produce more and tend to hold prices down over time. I assume most farmers will plant more and most will certainly plant more corn and soybeans this year and more next year because prices will be favorable.

"And if exports experience a 50-percent growth (as predicted), we're going to have a problem building reserves."

Production input prices can be expected to increase. Moore said that if corn planting increases by 15 percent, fertilizer demand is 15 percent greater and seed demand is that much greater.

He said most input costs should increase somewhat, because of demand.

This late spring may have some additional pressure on prices. Last year we had a late spring, and Moore noted that's why crops are short in supply this year.

His advise to growers was, "You don't need to be concerned about overplanting this year. Be assured you are not adding to a surplus for the next two years. We aren't going to go back to normal corn prices for quite a while."

Also, Moore said that, while it might be too late, farmers in Pennsylvania looking for feed may consider planting spring grains such as oats or spring barley.

Glen Shirk, Lancaster County extension agent, said dairymen are seeking alternative feeds, but so are beef producers and other livestock producers, putting pressure on those normally excess commodities.

"They're looking for all kinds of susbsistute commodities and feeds and they're hard to find, because everybody is looking for them, and demand is pushing the price of the commodities. For a lot of dairymen the spring harvest can't come too soon," he said.

He said that some options with potenital are grazing — graze small grains, hay fields and of course pastures. He said, however, whatever farmers do, don't jeopardize the crop yield or the stand to try gain a little edge on feeding livestock.

Shirk said that what the situation

Balancing Rations To Battle Milk Fever

DES MOINES, Iowa — Feeding strategies can help prevent a common disease of cows with newborn calves, according to a U.S. Department of Agriculture researcher.

"Managing the diets of pregnant cows is a very practical means of overcoming milk fever," said Ronald Horst, a researcher at the USDA's National Animal Disease Center in Ames, Iowa.

Research at the center has recently shown a connection between high levels of potassium in rations for pregnant cows and the occurrence of milk fever, a disease that results from a deficiency of calcium in the cow's blood stream soon after calving. Horst said researchers also discovered a similar link between milk fever and high levels of sodium.

He outlined the research at the joint Midwest meeting of the American Dairy Science Association and the American Society of Animal Science in Des Moines March 19.

Horst and his colleague, Jesse Goff, have shown that producers can use certain feeds or additives to prevent the problems. Typically the substances added include forms of sulfur and chloride which make the cow's blood slightly acidic.

"As a result, we seem to override the detrimental effects of sodium and potassium," Horst said. A careful analysis of the feed ration will show if there are enough sulfur and chloride compounds to offset the sodium and potassium in the diet or if additives should be used, he said.

But that approach has limitations. Horst said once potassium and sodium makes up more than 2 percent of the diet, the additives are difficult to use effectively because of palatability problems. That's when producers should make more significant changes in their dairy rations.

"Producers may need to look at alternative feeds," Horst said. "Alfalfa, for example, is high in potassium, while corn silage is relatively low."

Horst said most laboratories that provide dairy ration analysis can provide information producers need to make the dietary adjustments.

The researchers also state that producers could use urine pH to determine if they've balanced their rations correctly to minimize the effects of potassium and sodium.

"This will give producers another measure to use to see if they're on the right track. If they test seven to 10 days before calving and the pH is between 5.8 and 6.2, they can be reasonably sure that their dietary regimen will be successful," Horst said.

Horst said milk fever costs dairy producers millions of dollars each year. "The full impact of milk fever is difficult to measure because it brings on many secondary problems such as mastitis and reproductive and digestive problems."

Effects Of Grain Prices

really calls for is a serious hard business look at the operational costs.

"They really have to monitor which cows get that (quality) feed and which are giving a response for the extra feed they are consuming," he said.

Shirk said he does expect that many will put heifers and dry cows on pasture and that some will dry off some marginally producing cows early and put them on pasture to reduce feed costs.

He cautioned dairy farmers not to keep too many replacement heifers, and to be careful with grazing, to use a nutritionist in all feeding decisions and instead of wringing hands, to sit down with pencil and paper and get down to hard facts.

Distillers Grain Has Potential

DES MOINES, Iowa — Finishing cattle benefit when fed distillers grain, a product of ethanol manufacturing, according to research at Iowa State University.

"The bottom line is that it is an excellent feed and based on the performance of cattle has a higher apparent energy value than corn," said Allen Trenkle, a distinguished professor of animal science at ISU.

Trenkle presented his research results at the Midwest meeting of the American Society of Animal Science in Des Moines, March 18-20.

Distillers grains are produced by ethanol plants when corn is converted to fuel-grade alcohol. Trenkle refers to distillers grains as a co-product, rather than a by-product, of ethanol production because of its value as a feed.

Trenkle's study evaluated the performance of finishing cattle fed rations that replaced cracked corn with dry or wet distillers grains. Six diets were compared: corn and urea; corn, soybean meal and urea; corn, 16 percent dry distillers grains and urea; corn, 16 percent wet distillers grains and urea; corn and 28 percent wet distillers grains; and corn and 40 percent wet distillers grains.

"High-gain cattle need more protein," Trenkle said. "The ration with 16 percent distillers grains provided about the same protein as the soybean meal ration."

Increasing the amount of wet distillers grains in the diets decreased feed intake, reduced gain and improved feed conversion. Trenkle reported. The calculated net energy for gain values for dry and wet distillers grains were .92 and 1.5 times the energy value of corn, respectively.

Economic returns declined slightly as the percentage of wet distillers grains increased in the diet, but remained above the two diets without distillers grains, he added.

"The economic advantage of including distillers grains in rations depends on the cost," Genkle said.

The price charges by the ethanol plant used in the study was a third of the price of the corn purchased. Transportation costs are critical, he said, adding that finishing operations should be located within 20 miles of an ethanol plant.

Many ethanol plants use income from selling distillers grains to increase returns to the plant. Trenkle said some plants dry distillers grains to transport them long distances to dairy cattle areas for feed.

The problem with drying, he said, is that it results in a loss of feed value from solubles removed with the liquid. Researchers are unclear about the reason for the loss, but there is less energy in the dry distillers grains, resulting in a less valuable feed for finishing cattle.

Ellanna's Dolls Fashioned With The Greatest Care

LOU ANN GOOD
Lancaster Farming Staff

PALMYRA (Lebanon Co.) — Dolls by Ellanna Gish are no ordinary handmade dolls.

Her dolls seem to breath, walk, and talk.

Every part is made from scratch from the hand poured bisque faces and soft cuddly bodies to the hand-crocheted apron.

The precisely fashioned clothing features heirloom lace, antique buttons, jewelry, and even handcrafted leather shoes with buckles.

Words cannot adequately describe the precise detail used to fashion each doll. Two of her dolls have placed first in national competition, which has earned Ellanna the title of certified doll artisan.

While Ellanna is not aware of any local persons being certified as doll artisans, she said that thousands of doll artisans from around the world attend national competitions in New York.

Although Ellanna grew up as a 4-H'er who learned to make cloth dolls, she only became serious about making bisque dolls about six years ago.

That was after her mother had given her an antique bisque doll. Ellanna found so much delight in sewing new outfits for the doll that she signed up for a three-day doll making course. Since then she has taken numerous courses and attended international doll shows.

Her interest soon became a family affair. Ellanna's 87-year-old grandmother crochets delicate stockings for the dolls, an elderly aunt handknits and crochets replica clothing, and her sister crochets delicate fans from the finest of threads.

Even her husband Joel, who is an emergency room doctor at a Harrisburg hospital, assists by making such items as wooden doll stands and restoring glass cases used to display the doll collection.

Of his wife's hobby, Gish said that he became intrigued with it when he saw how much his wife enjoys it. "Doll making uses so many of her talents . e likes to sew, paint, and coll.c' old stuff."

Ellanna laughs and agrees. "I do love antiques — feathers, buttons, trinkets, lockets, old vintage clothing — everything that I incorporate into doll making."

Ellanna's dolls are hand designed from her own patterns so that no one else will ever have another doll like it.

She uses a liquid slip (clay) that is similar to that used to make fine china teacups. She has hundreds of molds with different size faces, which, after firing in her own kiln, she carefully whittles into expressive features. A perfectionist when it comes to doll making, Ellanna is known to throw away many of the heads if they don't pass her scrutiny.

"The face is what makes a doll. It's the first thing a person

Molds are used to form the fine porcelain bisque head, arms, and legs. Ellanna then carefully details features with tools, paints, and glass blown eyes. She uses different materials to make soft cuddly bodies. A device placed inside the doll's body enables the doll to be posed. The antique reproduction dolls are usually displayed, but they may be played with.

Dr. Joel Gish and his wife Ellanna are thrilled that their three sons, Daniel, 8; Tommy, 10; and David, 12, can grow up on the same Palmyra farm where Gish grew up. The 132-acres and the barns are farmed by a neighbor, but Gish hopes he and his sons may eventually farm it. Ellanna plans to turn one of the buildings into a doll shop where she will teach classes on doll making.

These infant dolls with soft cuddly bodies are the first that Ellanna made. The dolls are reproductions of those played with by little girls years ago.

notices," Ellanna said.

For that reason, Ellanna always uses mouth-blown glass eyes for the dolls. The realistic eyes give the dolls the appearance of a living, breathing child. The bisque arms and legs and the soft bodies are moveable or what Ellanna calls poseable.

To achieve the delicate natural coloring, Ellana fires the bisque doll parts as many as six times inbetween the various coats of painting.

After spending months designing a doll, it is not easy for Ellanna to part with it. She will not sell any of them, but gives them as gifts or displays them in her home. Last year, she donated an infant doll to Kraybill's Mennonite School Auction and this year has made a contemporary doll named Hope that will be auctioned off on May 11 for the school (see accompanying article). The Gish children attend the school and the auction is held annually to raise funds for the school.

Ellanna sent the doll's legs away to have hand-crafted leather shoes with buckles specially formed for the doll that will be auctioned.

Similar dolls generally sell for $1,500 to $2,000, but auction prices are unpredictable.

Generally, Ellanna specilizes in

This handcrafted doll named Hope will go to the highest bidder at the auction that benefits Kraybill Mennonite School on Saturday May 11. Ellanna Gish made the remarkably lifelike head, arms, and legs from meticulously crafted fine porcelain bisque. An armature hidden inside the cloth body allows for varied poses. Notice the leather buckle shoes made especially to fit the doll.

Handcrafted Doll To Be Auctioned To Benefit Kraybill's Mennonite School

This intricately detailed doll made by Ellanna Gish will be sold at the Kraybill Mennonite School Auction on Saturday May 11 at 11 a.m. The lifelike doll's head, arms, and legs are meticulously crafted of fine porcelain bisque. An armature hidden inside the cloth body allows for varied poses.

The doll named Hope wears a lace-trimmed dress and apron. The wide, floppy brim of the hat is perfect for shading her wishtful, blue, hand-blown glass eyes. The handmade frilly petticoat, handcrocheted lace stockings, and white leather shoes can be removed if the buyer wishes to dress her in other outfits. A nosegay of dainty wildflowers lays at her feet.

The doll is hand signed and dated on her left shoulder, which increases her value as a collectible doll.

The school auction will begin on Friday May 10 with a southern-style pig roast served from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. Other Friday night activities include a craft fair, art and quilt preview, collectible truck auction, and auction of antique collectibles, gift certificates, baskets and more.

The auction opens Saturday morning at 7 with a country breakfast. The general auction will begin at 8:30 a.m. and the lawn and garden auction at 9:30 a.m. Quilts, framed and matted limited-edition prints and originals, and specialty items will be sold. Throughout the day, visitors can purchase a wide variety of homemade foods. Childrens activities include a petting zoo from Hammer Creek Exotics, puppet shows, crafts, and games for all ages.

For more information, call the school at 717-653-5236. Accomodations in local bed and breakfasts are available.

The school is located at Kraybill Church and Gibble Roads in Mount Joy. Follow the auction signs.

12' End Wheel No-Till Drill

No-Till technology and maximum productivity in a 12' size

All of the benefits of Great Plains no-till technology are now available in a new 12 foot size. The new 12' End Wheel No-Till drill is designed to handle the planting needs of small to medium sized operations with maximum productivity.

Built to the high quality standards of Great Plains, the 12' End Wheel No-Till drill will plant in the most demanding of no-till conditions with extreme accuracy.

The end wheel design makes this drill extremely maneuverable. Keeping all ground-working com-ponents in-line with the end wheels prevents openers from bulldozing or bridging when working in rolling terrain. The end wheels also act as stabilizers to hold the openers steady when seeding on slopes.

Excess debris is no problem for this unit. Opener and coulter stagger of 10 3/4" allows trash to flow evenly and freely. No-till coulters create a mini-seedbed allowing openers to concentrate on seed placement.

Planting depth adjustments are quick and easy with the "T"-handle depth control system. State of the art solid seed tubes ensure that the seed exits the chute with "zero motion drop" for ultimate seed placement accuracy. The optional Seed-Lok™ wheel then presses each seed into moist soil for optimum germination.

The improved straight-arm, solid stand opener design, combined with the cushioned press wheel provides maximum down pressure with less wear and tear.

The large, welded seed box holds up to 2.4 bushels per foot. Exclusive Great Plains fluted feed seed cups coupled with the 4-speed gearbox deliver outstanding accuracy in varying rates and seeding conditions.

Designed with safety in mind, the 12' End Wheel No-Till drill comes equipped with transport safety lights and a wider walkboard.

Accessories available with the 12' End Wheel No-Till drill include: folding markers, coil tine harrows, seed box agitator and small seeds attachment.

Ellanna's Dolls

antique reproduction dolls rather than contemporary. She has a French doll with a music box to which the doll moves her head and hands in beat to the music.

Some of the reproduction dolls were never intended to be played with. A French fashion doll is a reproduction of a doll that was made to display the latest fashions in a dress shop.

"A trunk full of clothing and accessories shows the latest fashions in everything that a proper lady would have for a trousseau at that time," Ellanna said of the trunk filled with items such as pantaloons, chemise, antique opera glasses, slippers, a parasol, and dresses.

Ellanna finds unique pieces such as a doll-size antique purse, leather trunk, and other accessories at auctions and antique shops.

The doll bodies range from soft bodies to composition bodies that are made from a combination of glue, sawdust, and cardboard.

One of the large rooms in the Gish farmhouse is filled with doll body parts, patterns, fabric and accessories. Ellanna easily differentiates between German, French, and American parts of the dolls. The kiln is housed in a garage.

The couple and their three sons, David, 12; Daniel, 8; and Tommy, 10, live on the farm in which Joel grew up. They purchased the 132-acre farm from his parents in 1990. The handsome 1791 farmhouse is built of earthy shades of brownstone. Adjacent wooden barns are now painted a cream color. The farmhouse's wide windows still have some of the wavy, bubbly glass typical of that period. Random length floor boards, wide moldings, and rattail hinges are still intact but the Gishes are stripping the woodwork and walls, building in closets, and installing new wiring.

The Gishes rent out their land and barn, but Gish confides that he hopes eventually to quit doctoring to farm again. With three sons expressing an interest in farming, he recalls his own enjoyment dairy farming while growing up.

Although doll making is only a hobby for Ellanna now, she hopes someday to teach doll-making classes in an adjacent building on the farm. "My job is being a mommy now — that's important to both my husband and me — but maybe in five years I'll have more time," she said.

"I don't want to sell the dolls I make, but I do want to teach others. It's a wonderful heirloom to create for a daughter."

She said that parents can actually learn to make dolls sculpted to look like their own children.

If her dream comes to fulfillment, Ellanna will offer all the supplies and molds needed for students to purchase.

This French fashion doll is a reproduction of a doll that was used to display the latest fashions in a dress shop. The trunk at her feet is filled with the latest fashions that a proper lady would have for a trousseau during that era. To complement the doll's outfits, Ellanna has been able to find heirloom jewelry, buttons, parasol, opera glasses, a purse, and other accessories used during that era.

Ida's Notebook

by Ida Risser

Now that spring has finally arrived we can spend more time outdoors. The other week my husband and I went trout fishing. We didn't get any fish but we had a pleasant time as we fished at several spots on the Little Swatara Creek.

The squirrels were scampering everywhere and tiny brown birds crept along the water's edge. They didn't seem to drink but rather they hunted for food. The skunk cabbage was bright yellow-green in the wet spots. I sat on a log in the shadow of an arch bridge and tossed my line under it.

On this particular day even Blue Marsh was not a good place to fish as the water had been quite high. The sun sparkled on the water as several boats cruised by us. We even visited a relative who lives nearby.

Our black mother cat outdid herself this spring as she raised six black kittens. This is a record for her. I've been trying to tame them with saucers of milk on the back porch. When they're big enough, I'm hoping they will live on our dairy farm.

It is nice to be appreciated. Whether it is for baking a favorite pie or simply patching a pair of trousers. Often what we do for others is not even noticed. Probably because it is accepted that we are only doing our job.

Recently someone told me how much they appreciated some old photos that I shared. But in this case, I do not deserve the credit as it was my mother and my great-uncle who used their cameras and abilities to my advantage. Old buildings were often the subject of their interest — banks, bridges, mills, schools and churches held their interest. One never knows what others will think of our efforts in years to come.

Vacation Farms Provide Good Side Income

LINDA WILLIAMS
Bedford Co. Correspondent

EVERETT (Bedford Co.) — "Many people today have no idea what it is like to stay on a farm," Nadine Fox of Buck Valley Ranch in Warfordsburg told those attending the seminar on farm vacations.

Nadine told of the pros and cons of sharing your home with vacationers.

"You have to like people," she emphasized. "You will be giving up your privacy."

Nadine, a teacher, said no one should expect to get rich with farm vacation, but, "it is a good side income."

"Be up front with your guests. When someone calls for a reservation, tell them if you don't have private baths. Don't be afraid to ask for a deposit and tell them it is not refundable if they don't show. I have put dinner on the table for guests who never showed."

"Most of it is common sense," she continued. "Make certain your rooms are clean with fresh linens on the bed. Have smoke alarms."

Nadine suggests starting small with one guest room. "Don't try to put your guests in junior's room," she advised. "Have a room only for guests."

Other advice:

• Decide if you want to include children. Her solution is to charge half price for children on weekdays and full price on weekends.

• A drawing card is good. At Buck Valley it is horses and trail rides. If you live near good hunting grounds, let your guests know.

• Use your imagination. Plan a mystery weekend or a seminar. Don't be afraid of competition. Encourage bed and breakfasts or other farm vacations in your area. With a selection, you will have more people coming to the area.

• "You can spend thousands of dollars on advertising or you can spend next to nothing and may get the same results," Nadine says. "Don't advertise locally." Nadine advertises in the big cities around Baltimore and Washington D.C. There will always be new people looking for a place to visit who will think your ad is brand new."

• When a publication solicits your advertising, look through it and call some of the advertisers to find out if it is worthwhile.

• Take breaks when you need them. If you don't want guests next weekend, just tell them you're full.

• Do what you do best. If you don't like to clean, contract with a local agency. "I would rather pay a teen-ager to clean the barn floor than to hurt my back doing it myself," Nadine says.

• Liability insurance is a must if you are going to continue to own your home after someone falls down your steps. Buck Valley has very high insurance rates because of the horseback riding. Other vacation homes might have more reasonable rates.

• Before opening your business, check on zoning. Check state regulations if you are serving food. "States vary," Nadine explained. "Maryland is much more restrictive than Pennsylvania."

Jazz Up Your Menu With Tropical Fruits

Warm, sunny days bring a sense of freedom and spark a longing for lighter foods. But it's too early for fresh produce from the garden or orchard.

Pineapples, oranges, bananas, and coconut often satisfy the hunger for summertime food. Maybe its because tropical and citrus fruits remind us of balmy weather and plenty of sunshine. Whatever the reason, these recipes from our readers will lighten the day.

1 cup milk
15-ounce can crushed pineapples
2 cups whipped cream toppings

Enter Dairy Recipe Drawing

June Dairy Month is almost here. It's time to enter Lancaster Farming's annual Cow Mania Drawing.

Select your favorite recipe, which must include a substantial amount of at least one dairy product. Dairy ingredients include milk, cream, sour cream, whipped cream, butter, yogurt, buttermilk, ice cream, and any hard and soft cheeses. Please check your recipe carefully. Margarine and non-dairy substitutes such as whipped topping do not qualify as dairy products.

The recipe may be for an appetizer, dip, soup, bread, main dish, vegetable, dessert, beverage, snack, or salad.

Clearly print or type your recipe. Be sure to give accurate measurements, temperatures, times, and sizes of baking dishes to use. We reserve the right to disqualify entries if these guidelines are not followed.

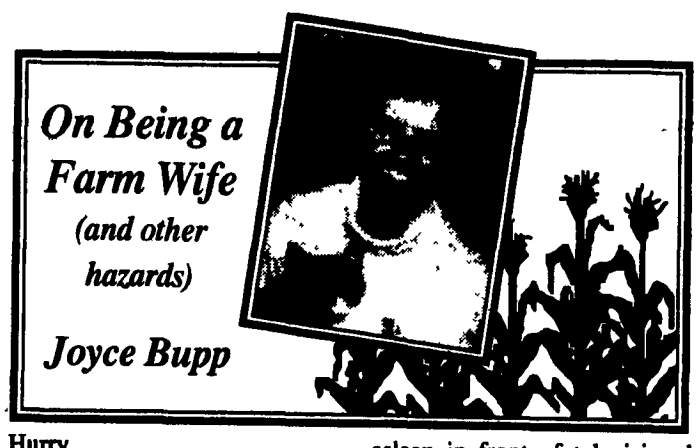
The difference between this contest and the weekly recipes printed is that we ask you to include a few paragraphs about yourself and your family. Although it is not required, please include a photograph of your family or yourself, which we will print with your recipe. Photos will be returned if you write your name and address on the back of the photo.

Look for a picture of the prizes in next week's issue of Lancaster Farming. Winners will be selected by a drawing. Although not every person can win a prize, readers enjoy the recipes and reading tidbits of information about the contributor.

Only one entry per family allowed. Be sure to include your name, full address, and phone number on the recipe. If you win, and your full address is not printed on the recipe, we cannot mail you the prize.

Send your recipe, photo, and accompanying information to Lou Ann Good, Lancaster Farming Cow Mania Drawing, P.O. Box 609, 1 E. Main St., Ephrata, PA 17522.

Send entries immediately. Deadline for the receipt of entries is June 1.



Hurry.

Early morning. Pink-tinted clouds on the horizon. Sunlight just beginning to peek over the distant woods. Robins already chorusing their greetings from the treetops. Daylight's wastin' away, for goodness sake.

Truck roar shatters the morning peace. Manure to haul. Showers threatening later in the day. Fields need covered. Pits and sheds need emptied. Early spring work already behind from everlasting winter.

Hurry. Hurry.

Hustle the cows into the barn. Finish the chores. Corn ground to be chisel-plowed. Lime to be spread. Fertilizer to be hauled. More seed to be picked up. Finish spraying alfalfa fields.

Tire flat on the planting tractor. Disk needs greased. Planter piece needs welded. Hydraulic oil running low. Call for diesel fuel. Hope wind blows to dry off last shower. And stops when spray truck arrives.

No time for breakfast. Lunch on the run in the field. Wave to kids as you fly pass the house with the spreader. Make mental notes to call artificial breeder. Tire repair people. Vet. Gobble dish of ice cream for supper before falling asleep in front of television late night news.

Hurry! Hurry! Hurry!

WHOA. SLOW DOWN.

So you like being a farmer? You thrive (most of the time, anyway) on the adrenalin-charge of spring? Your blood flows a bit faster as those corn shoots poke out of the ground and that alfalfa greens up into a velvet carpet? And how do you expect to do that if you become a statistic? Huh?

Farms have long been pinpointed as one of the most dangerous worksites. Farmers get busy. Farmers get rushed. And then sometimes, farmers get careless. And overtired.

And become a statistic. Like the ones tabulated last year by Penn State professor and safety specialist Dennis Murphy, whose scary sheet of farm fatalities has patiently gathered dust on my desk all winter.

Sad tally for the year of 1994 was 35 farm accident fatalities. Tractors were responsible for 16, 11 of those from rollovers. Seven from machinery — one each by a corn chopper, wagon, baler, manure spreader, payloader, backhoe and bulldozer. Four falls. One death from a bull. Two each due to individuals being struck by an object and by being overcome with gas. Six of the total are reported to have appeared to be agriculture related but with insufficient information to determine for certain.

Regardless of hwo they happened, each is equally, sadly tragic.

May and November each scored five fatalities. August tallied seven , with six in September.

Sunday and Friday were the worst days, each counting seven farm accident deaths that year. Tuesday ranked next with six, followed by Saturday with five. Based solely on these numbers, it appears that weekends working on the farm can be hazardous to your health.

Nearly all age groups suffered fatalities from farm work accidents. Highest, at nine, were in the 70s age group, followed by the 40s farmers with seven. Especially tragic, to me as a mom, were the four deaths to kids under age 10.

Hurry! Hurry! Hurry! But hurry a little carefully during this hectic planting season, wouldja' all? And KEEP THOSE KIDS OFF THE TRACTORS.

I know. Nag . . . nag . . . nag. But, as Shakespeare might have said: "This better to be nagged than to be (body) bagged."

Well, he might have. Under the circumstances.

Moo Kooler is a line of 2%, branded, flavored milk that puts the pizazz back into kids' desire for milk. It's a refreshing beverage packaged in a 12-ounce, recyclable plastic bottle with a twist-off lid. Moo Kooler comes in four kid-appealing flavors, and is available in either single serving or 4-pack.

ANSWER — Winifred Adams, Greencastle, wanted a recipe for Amish macaroni salad. Thanks to Karen Hamilton, Mathias, W.V.,for sending a recipe that she said is delicious.

Amish Macaroni Salad

½ pound macaroni, cooked and drained
3 hard-boiled eggs, diced
½ bunch celery, diced
1 carrot, diced
1 cup chopped sweet pickles and juice
1 small onion, diced

Mix all these ingredients together in a large bowl. Combine the following ingredients and whisk until smooth and pour over the macaroni mixture

½ cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup salad dressing
1 cup milk or cream

Thoroughly mix dressing into macaroni mixture and cover and refrigerate at least six hours.

ANSWER — Jean Nestler, Halifax, wanted a recipe for smoked sausage similar to that made by Herpack of Harrisburg during the 1970s. Thanks to Josephine Matenus, Dallas, for sending a recipe.

Wrolleuski Polish Kiebasie

5 pounds pork butts, ground coarsely
1 pound ground beef
2 tablespoons salt
1 teaspoon pepper
½ cup mustard seed
3-4 cloves garlic, finely chopped
2 cups cold water
Hog casing

Wash enough hog casing for the meat. Let stand in cold water overnight. Grind meat coarsely, mix all the remaining ingredients with the remaining water on top. Stuff the casing with this mixture. Add 1 tablespoon salt peter to smoke the sausage.

ANSWER — A Geneva, N.Y. reader sent the following recipes for the person who requested jellies made from frozen fruit juice. She writes that fruit juice jellies require twice as much pectin as fresh fruit. The jellies will store well in the refrigerator for 2 to 3 months and do not require canning or sealing in paraffin.

Measure the sugar needed and set aside. Warm the glass jars with hot water, dry, and set aside. Measure your choice of fruit juice into a large enough kettle to accomodate a lot of bubbling, mix a box of pectin into the juice in the pan. Place the saucepan over high heat, stirring constantly. If you use a frozen juice concentrate, cook and stir the mixture until bubbles form around the edges. If you use bottled juice, stir and quickly let the mixture read a hard and steady boil. All at once, add the sugar. Bring the mixture to a vigorous boil that cannot be stirred down; let it boil vigorously for one full minute, stirring constantly. Remove the pan from heat and skim off any foam. Pour into jars (4 to 5 one-cup jars) and cover with lids at once. Let filled glasses or jars set at room temperature for 24 hours. Refrigerate one full week before using. Follow these directions for the following recipes.

Grape Juice Jelly

Grandparents Dilemma: Children's Gifts

Grandparents often find it difficult to buy gifts for grandchildren. Although many grandparents opt to just give money or have a parent choose a gift, others enjoy shopping for a gift themselves. Choosing gifts for younger children is usually easy because all young children enjoy toys and most toys are marked with age guidelines. But as children get older, it becomes increasingly harder to select gifts. Getting the correct size, style, or color can be difficult. Many times grandparents just guess what item to choose based upon their grandchildren's interests. This more often leads to a hit or miss deal.

Many grandparents have taken an alternate route to gift giving by giving them something that they already own. One grandparent shared that she asked her grandchildren to pick out one item from a collection of crystal that the grandchildren had always admired. This collection represented years of a personal collection from gifts, travel souvenirs, and other memorable moments in her life.

Another grandparent who quilted, asked each grandchild to select a quilt from those she had on display in one room. These children ranged in ages from 4 to 16, but they each selected their own quilt. The grandparent then stitched their names and the date on each quilt to mark the personal selection. Each child received his or her quilt as a gift when they were married, went away to school, or at another memorable life event.

Another idea for gift giving is to take the grandchildren and go on a treasure hunt in the attic. Children find the most wonderful treasures in attics. My children have spent countless hours rummaging through each of their grandparent's attics. There is always a new treasure with a memorable story attached to each successful hunt. This "new find" would be brought home or kept at grandma's as a special toy with which to play.

The following are a few suggestions for cleaning out your attic and also to fulfill your favorite treasure seekers quest for a unique gift:

- After going through the various boxes and crates, have your grandchildren take the selected items downstairs. This will make it much easier for all of you to thoroughly inspect and sort items.
- Keep and file information related to your family tree. This would be a great time to get out a notebook for your grandchildren and have them write things down as you share experiences related to the items you have found. Another idea would be to set up a video camera and record the whole afternoon. Children of all ages love to watch themselves over and over again. This will also encapsulate the special day that you will keep forever.
- This is a wonderful time to divide up the old tablecloths, embroidered doilies, linen towels, and other family heirlooms that you have had stored away for years.
- Is there furniture that grandchildren may want to use in their bedroom, apartment, etc.? Old hat boxes, clothing, and holiday decorations are all wonderful finds!
- After you've sorted and selected what you want to keep and what your grandchildren want, have them help you with a yard sale. The money you make with your grandchildren can be spent on a special outing together.

Whatever gift giving method you choose, the most important part is to give something that comes from your heart. Grandchildren need love and attention. Sharing through any of these activities communicates how you feel about them, and no material gift is as precious. Remember that giving yourself is always the ultimate gift to give.

Elementary Agriscience Teaches Students Agriculture

LORETTA GOLDEN
Cambria Co. Correspondent

WILLIAMSBURG (Blair Co.) — Some of the elementary school children in the Williamsburg Area School District find themselves in a very unique situation. They are members of an agriscience group for elementary students.

Norma Saylor, one of the group's advisors, points out that to the best of her knowledge, Williamsburg is the only school district in Pennsylvania to offer an elementary agriscience program.

Saylor, a third grade teacher, along with Daren Johnston, high school dean, and Tom Willey, high school agriscience teacher, run this program on a voluntary after-school basis. It is open to interested students in grades three through six.

Students meet once a month for an hour. A small part of that time is devoted to formal instruction and the rest of the hour is spent working "hands-on." So many students signed up for the program that the advisors run two sessions per month in order to accommodate everyone.

The purpose of the club is to introduce and inform students about careers available in the agriculture industry. Johnston explains, "there is a real need for young people to understand that ag is not just digging up dirt."

The program does not go into great depth but instead, touches on a wide range of subjects.

Since the inception of the program a few years ago, the agenda has included: veterinary science, forestry management, water quality, dairy management, environmental concerns, agricultural technology, embryology, aquaculture, and hydroponics.

The members have also had the chance to learn about various farm animals such as goats, pigs, cows, horses, and sheep. They even visited a nearby Christmas Tree Farm to learn more about that local industry. Next month they will travel to an area sheep farm. The school district provides enough funding for the group to be able to take these small field trips.

Since all three advisors grew up on dairy farms, they are all familiar with ag as a way of life. Their enthusiasm for agriculture is evidenct and they feel that this elementary ag-science program is a way to generate student interest at a very early age.

In April, the group participate in a program concerning aquaculture and hydroponics. After a brief discussion on plants and identifying the different parts, the children were eager to visit the high school greenhouse.

According to Mr. Johnston, the greenhouse and equipment were purchased by matching grants. One was the Agricultural and Rural Use Grant from the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture. It was matched by school district funding.

The students got their hands dirty planting marigold seeds. They will be able to monitor their progress in the weeks to come. Of special interest was the aquaculture and hydroponics display which is being set up by Willey and his high school students.

Willey explained that since the water is not yet heated only blue gills are currently being raised. This is because blue gills are cold-water fish. He also explained the purpose and necessity of the biofilter in purifying the water.

The hydroponics end of the display has not yet come completed, but when it is these students will have a better grasp of what it means "to grow plants without soil."

The students thoroughly enjoyed their time in the greenhouse. Fifth grader Shane Fether has participated in the program for two years. He says that he "really enjoys learning about farming." Jessica Hammond, a sixth grader who is in the program for her first year commented that she's "learned lots of interesting things." She said that she especially enjoyed last month's program dealing with Australia.

Saylor explained that because she travels quite a bit she enjoys sharing her experiences with the students. During last month's session this was done via a video which she took in Australia. The children were able to compare their own way of life with that they learned in the video.

Johnston, Saylor, and Willey realize that every student participating in the club will not pursue a career in agriculture later in life. Their hope is that each will become more aware of the possibilities available to them as well as to develop a healthy respect for those who make the agricultural industry number one in Pennsylvania.

Pennsylvania Young Farmers Select Spokesperson For Ag

EVANS CITY (Somerset Co.) — Pennsylvania Young farmers Association selected Jean H. Kummer as spokesperson for agriculture. Jean lives and works on a dairy farm in Evans City, Somerset County. She is a member of the Derry Area Young Farmers Chapter.

Jean Kummer will represent Pennsylvania at the National Contest to be held in Fortworth, Texas on Dec. 4-7. She will give a five-minute speech, and the three judges will ask her questions about agriculture. In the past, Pennsylvania had two national winners — 1986 Phoebe Bitler from Fleetwood, and in 1992, Mary Ann Keith from Alexander.

The objective of the contest is to encourage farmers and their spouses to develope articulate response to consumer conocerns about agriculture, to help bridge the communication gap between rural and urban consumers, and to provide the opportunity to talk with the news media and consumers about these concerns.

Spokesperson for Agriculture is Jean Kummer from Evans City. Her speech centered on transition in the dairy industry. Jeff Moser from Keystone Farm Credit, presents the award.

Kummers' area of discussion was transitional in the dairy industry and agriculture. The title of her speech was "Trendy The Cow." It's related too; when is a cow more than a cow? You think of milk and beef, but this is only a small part of a cow. When it's a meal or when it's a household item, such as glues, cosmetics, and plastics. Pharmacy items, such as plasma, bonemeal, and vitamin B12, which comes from the liver. Hydraulic brake fluid, car polishes, waxes, and runway foam used at airports are only a small part of what a cow is used for. Be thankful that there are millions of cattle in this country, Kummer tells people.

With the help of Doyle Paul, Berlin Brothersvalley Young Farmers Advisor, and Paul Kemerer, Region 5 Vice President, Kummer set up a media blitz at a local grocery store, A lucky shopper had all food items paid for by PYFA. The sponsor for the event was Keystone Credit.

After sorting the shopping items, PYFA paid $115.16 for couple's food items and they only had to pay $26 for non-food items. The young couple was most appreciative and surprised by this activity.

PYFA will run another spokesperson contest at the 1997 Winter Convention in Gettysburg. Any Young Farmer or wife between the ages 19 and 40 are eligible. Contact your advisor or Ed Zug, state public relation director, for more information.

Spring Awareness Day Focuses On Winning

LOU ANN GOOD
Lancaster Farming Staff

LEESPORT (Berks Co.) — Winning battles with health, finances, and safety highlighted the annual Spring Awareness Day held by Berks County Extension last week.

About 200 women attended the all-day seminar held at the Agriculture Center in Leesport.

Linette Mertz, Miss Pennsylvania and a Berks countian, wrapped up the seminar after sessions by a certified fitness trainer, a policeman, a nurse specialist, and extension agents.

Finances

"Money in people's pockets is like water in a sieve," said Fred Davis, multi-county extension office.

In plain, simple terms lightened with a bit of humor, Davis outlined strategies for cutting costs and financial planning to provide for such needs as college for children and retirement planning.

Davis emphasized the need to make dollars work instead of haphazardly facing the future.

He projected that banking costs will surprise many within the next year as banks will charge for every service available. He warned that consumers should realize that mutual funds are not protected by FDIC just because they are purchased through a bank.

Davis believes that some type of social security payments will continue because it will be political suicide for any politician who votes against it. However, the Social Security Commission recommends that by the year 2007, anyone with taxable income will have benefits taxed.

"Most children get their financial habits from their parents," Davis said. "A lack of training in money management skills in our schools and poor financial role models at home are having disastrous consequences for youth as they become adults."

Statistics reveal that 37 percent of people in their 20s owe more than $1,000 on their credit cards.

"If they pay only the minimum required on a $1,000 loan, it will take 10 years to pay it off and they will have paid $900 in interest," Davis said.

For families who have children, Davis recommended they enroll in the Pennsylvania Tuition Account Program, which enables families to lock in at today's college tuitions.

Although less financial aid is available from the government, it is important to file taxes early in order to apply for student aid.

"Missing a financial aid deadline is worse than missing a mortgage payment. Your bank will likely give you another chance—but colleges probably will not," Davis said.

For those interested in an in-depth financial seminar, one will be held May 22 and 29 at the Berks County Agriculture Center. The fee is $10. Call the Center at 610-378-1327, for more details.

Fitness

"'Can't' is not a word in my dictionary," said certified fitness trainer Lynn Schaeffer.

She believes that proper exercise can be achieved at any age regardless of inconveniences. "The key is moderation," she said.

Schaeffer led the audience in simple exercises. She showed them how to use soup cans and other household items for weights instead of investing money in buying them. Leg raises with weights can be achieved by putting cans in a purse and hanging the purse over the ankles while doing leg raises.

Schaeffer stressed the importance of good nutrition in combination with exercise for health. She warned against eating indiscriminately just because the food is low fat. "Consuming more carbohydrates than your body burns will be converted into fat and stored as fat," she said.

Personal Safety

Crime prevention can often be accomplished by preventative measures, according to Sergeant McCarty of the Reading Police Department.

"Most burglaries occur during the day," McCarty said.

He warned of the need to be careful who finds out when a family vacations. Newspaper companies send printouts to carriers of people who are vacationing. These are often haphazardly discarded and picked up by passerbys searching for such information.

Shrubbery should be kept trimmed and the outside well lighted to prevent entry at night. Lighting should be straight down to illuminate the building and not placed so that shadows are under doors. Deadbolts should be used on doors.

The policeman explained how thiefs can easily remove glass inserts around doors to reach inside and open doors. Glass sliding doors can easily be lifted out of position. McCarty explained how these doors can be made burglar proof.

"When walking on the street, look confident and make eye contact with suspicious characters. They are less likely to attack if they believe they can be identified," McCarty said.

If someone attempts to snatch your purse, toss it and run yelling, McCarty instructed. Money and credit cards are best kept on yourself rather than in a purse. He demonstrated several alarms that can be used while walking to ward off attacks and encouraged the use of mace.

Scholarship

Paula Plageman, family living advisory board member for the extension, presented a $500 scholarship to Amy Kulp, a clothing and textile student at Albright College. The money was donated by participants of the winter workshop held by the family living advisory board.

Winning Answers From Doctors

Kathy Leinbach, a clinical nurse specialist, elaborated on ways that patients may win answers from doctors by asking careful questions. She emphasized the importance of developing a partnership of respect, trust, and mutual obligation.

"Physicians are not superhuman. They do not possess the skills to be mind readers. There are not cures for many of the maladies that strike us," she said.

Leinbach said, "You are in charge of your body." She emphasized the need to take proper care and the need to monitor medications by using a diary format. Prepare questions ahead of time by making notes.

If you are uncomfortable with a doctor's recommendation, tell him or her and ask for alternatives.

If, after verbalizing your questions and fears, your physician does not seem aware of your needs as an individual and will not explain treatment in terms you understand, you should probably switch physicians.

Miss Pennsylvania

Miss Pennsylvania Linette Mertz, a Berks countian, talked about her reign and the Literacy Is For Everyone (LIFE) program that she established.

Mertz attributes her achievement as the state winner to the dedication, hard work, and determination that she learned while growing up on a dairy farm.

Mertz stressed that the Miss America contest is much more than a beauty pageant. She said it is the best scholarship resource available for women.

Often people ask Mertz to tell them some "dirt" about the Miss America program.

"There is no dirt. It's a great experience even if I didn't win," she said.

In addition to appearances at many events, Mertz has visited more than 50 elementary schools to promote Project Life, which uses free time students have while waiting for school to begin. People from the community come to school to read to the children. Research has shown that children are often inspired to read on their own when adults read to them.

Concerned that 60 million Americans cannot read at the fourth grade level, Mertz has joined forces with Gov. Tom Ridge's wife Michelle to launch "Stop, Talk, and Read to a Child Today." The program, slated for May 20, will focus on encouraging adults to read to a child.

Contestant scores in the Miss America contest receive 40 percent for talent. Mertz, a country singer, closed her speech at the Spring Awareness Day by singing a song.

On behalf of the Berks County Family Living Committee, Paula Plageman presents a $500 homemaker's scholarship to Amy Kulp, a student at Albright College.

Steer Sale Raises Money For Boy Stricken With Guillan-Barre

GAIL STROCK
Mifflin Co. Correspondent

BELLEVILLE (MIFFLIN Co.) — Jeremiah Brackbill's medical flight back from India to his home near Mifflintown, Juniata County, will be a little smoother thanks to the kindness of many, many people.

The 9-year-old was stricken with Guillan-Barre Syndrome while on a mission trip to India with his mother, Susan Brackbill. Guillan-Barre is a condition that affects the nervous system, muscular system, and brain. While Guillan-Barre's damage to nerves is usually temporary, doctors say Jeremiah's case is a severe one. He can't return home until he's much stronger, maybe months from now.

As of last week, Jeremiah was still on life support at Ludhiana Christian Medical College in India, a hospital staffed by British and American missionaries. His grandfather, Lee Weaver of Mifflintown, keeps concerned friends abreast of Jeremiah's road to recovery — one he hopes and prays will lead to a full recovery.

"Jeremiah has suffered several small strokes. His vision is still impaired. The right side of his body is paralyzed, but he responds to questions by blinking his eyes," says the Juniata County contract hog farmer and missionary.

"We're looking at a long rehabilitation. There's a risk of something else setting in when his resistance is down. He's lost a lot of weight. But he has a real strong faith. He knows God will help him through."

Guillan-Barre syndrome can follow any viral infection or immunization. Jeremiah was properly inoculated for his India trip, and a Harrisburg Hospital doctor told the family that Jeremiah could very well have contracted the syndrome before he left the United States.

Jeremiah's mother Susan, director of nursing at the Malta Home in Granville, stays by his side while Jeremiah's father, Gerald, keeps in touch with his son by fax. Visits from family members who make the trip to India certainly boost Susan's and Jeremiah's morale. And they appreciate the hospitality and kindness shown by those around them in India.

You can help by sending cards and letters to Jeremiah Brackbill, Ludhiana Christian Medical College, Ludhiana, Punjab, India 141008. Donations can be made to the Jeremiah Fund, c/o Lewistown Trust Company, 100 West Water Street, Lewistown, PA, 17044 or to the St. Stephen's Lutheran Church in Mifflintown, c/o Pastor Stuart Lengel.

The 1,110-pound black Angus steer up for auction at the Belleville Livestock Market this past Wednesday didn't know he was being sold to help a 9-year-old Mifflintown boy hospitalized in India.

Wade Cleck, general manager of Valley Protein in Mifflintown and neighbor of Jeremiah Brackbill, donated the steer. Another neighbor, Jackie Everitt, helped arrange and advertise the auction.

Marshall Bowersox of Bowersox's Livestock, Winfield, bought the steer for $875. Bowersox said he purchases animals at youth fairs to help kids out too. His business deals in selling, buying and trading all kinds of livestock.

Before the Angus was allowed to leave the ring, Wade Cleck handed auctioneer Mark Glick an envelope with $220, donated by Valley Protein employees.

Eugene Glick, owner of the Belleville Livestock Market, raised $526 for Jeremiah Brackbill simply by "passing the hat."

Earlier in the day, a load of corn was donated. It sold for $134.39. A pig was also waiting to be sold for the Brackbill boy.

A TASTE OF MARKET GARDENING

Home gardens today can become a market or truck patch garden of tomorrow. How? Start by selling only quality garden produce to friends and neighbors. Unfortunately, food consumption patterns have changed the rules for market gardeners.

Food consumption away from the home has skyrocketed to 40 percent of a household's annual food expenditure. This consumption trend consists of pre-prepared or made-to-order foods provided by restaurants, cafeterias, delis, farm markets, and market stands.

Along with this growth in more prepared food purchases away from the home, market gardeners need to adjust to changing consumer attitudes. For example, consumers want high quality. They are often willing to pay a surprisingly high price to get the quality they want. They also prefer to purchase fresh vegetables year-round regardless of the source (local, domestic or imported) with some preference expressed for local purchasing. Consumers like to purchase uniform and clean produce as well as produce that is true to type. Lastly, consumers today like plenty of variety when shopping.

For market gardeners and small growers, here's a few ways to keep your local produce dollar in your own pocket.

• Add value to your crop. For example, fresh market broccoli is traditionally sold whole. Add value to selling portioned amounts of small floreets or as several heads wrapped together with a rubber band.

• Save harvest costs by strictly pick-your-own cropping depending on your location. (it needs to be a good one). Pick-your-own blueberries, strawberries and snap beans offer significant savings especially on high value crops.

• Contract to sell produce to neighboring roadside stands and pick-your-own operations. For example, high-quality tomatoes are always in demand locally. Consistent pricing from stand to stand in a neighborhood assures a better return on investment.

• Market to grocery stores that

• Be a hard grader before marketing your produce. For example, grade peppers including hot peppers, jalapeans, chiles, hot cherries and bell peppers for size and color. Check for worm and insect damage.

• Use consumer friendly packaging. Fresh market strawberries are often sold in quart cartons covered with plastic wrap. However, groceries and consumers like the one-piece molded plastic containers called a "clamshell."

• Sell the unusual-native plants, culinary herbs and ethnic vegetables to restaurants. Give chefs your expected harvest dates and ideas on how to prepare.

• Have fun selling produce in urban markets. Despite the negatives associated with the word "urban," build a market following of local customers. Chat and educate the consumer with ready-to-eat menus or recipes cards. Give them new variety to try along side an "old" vegetable favorite.

• Introduce children to produce selection and buying. Start by encouraging young people to join 4-H, complete science projects by growing vegetable and to shop the produce counters with their parents. Make special trips with children to local farm markets.

4-H Spring Kickoff

One hundred thirty-six 4-H members, leaders, family, and friends attended the annual Lycoming County 4-H Spring Kickoff on Saturday evening, April 20.

Held at the Williamsport YMCA, the event ceremoniously launched the 4-H season. While many 4-H clubs began work on this year's projects soon after last year's roundup in August, some clubs are just beginning to hold club meetings again in the spring.

The evening began with the group gathered in the gymnasium. Ev Simmons, Lycoming County 4-H program assistant and Tom Murphy, extension agent and 4-H coordinator, made welcoming remarks and detailed the event's activities. Presentation of ribbons to the recent graduates of the 4-H Toastmasters Public Speaking Club, medals to last year's Fashion Revue participants, favors to Stephanie Ulmer and Sarah Way for participation in a Quiz Bowl at State Fashion Revue, and "I Dare You" Awards for personal integrity, balanced living and potential for leadership to Melanie Harris and David Smith were made. Sixteen door prizes were won by drawing.

For questions or additional information, contact Ev Simmons, Lycoming County 4-H program assistant, at (717) 327-2350.

4-H Salutes Volunteers

April 21-27 was National 4-H Volunteer Week. Lycoming County salutes its 170-plus volunteer leaders for their generously donated time, effort, expertise, and patience. These volunteers guide the more than 450 county 4-H members as they master project, social, and personal skills.

Volunteers are essential to the successful delivery of 4-H programs to youth. In recent years there were nearly 667,000 4-H volunteer leaders, including teen leaders, in the nation, more than 14,500 in Pennsylvania, and more than 170 in Lycoming County.

The average 4-H volunteer donates 220 hours per year to preparing for club meeting and teaching youth, drives 300-400 miles, and spends about $50 of his own. The value of volunteer time and expenses nationwide for a year is well over $1 billion.

To locate a 4-H club near you or to volunteer as a 4-H leader, contact your local cooperative extension office.

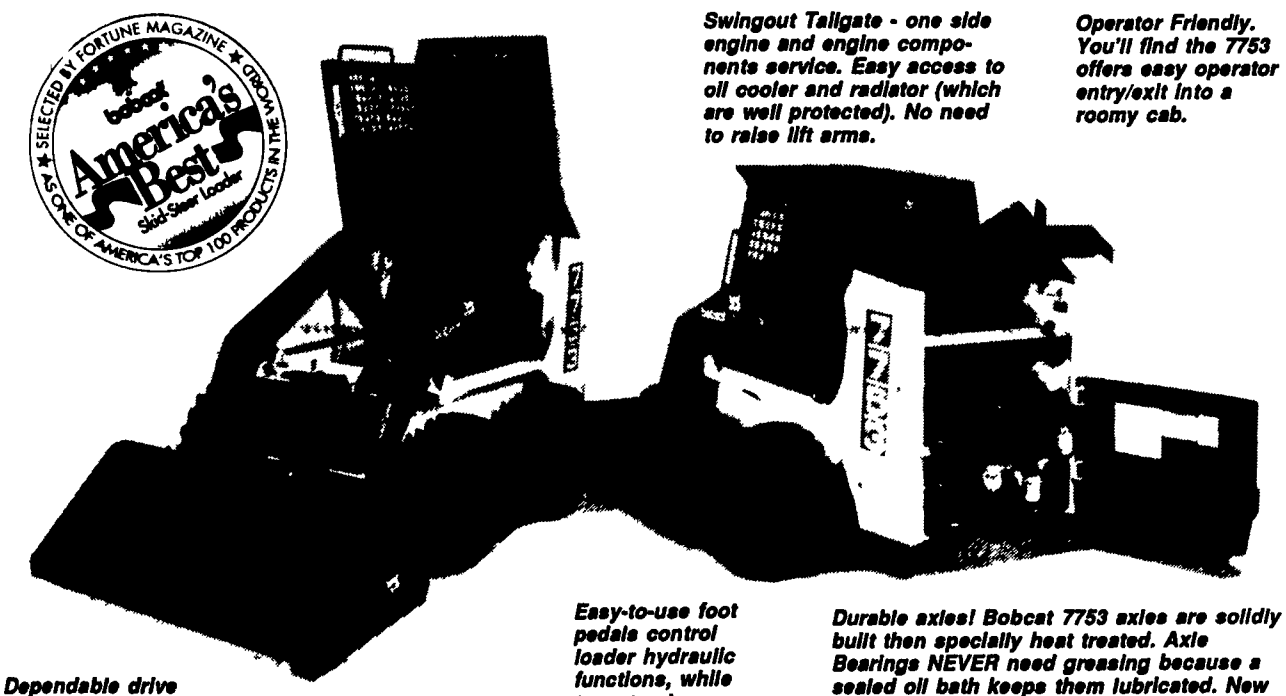
Bobcat 7753 Long-Wheelbase Skid-Steer Loader

It's What's Inside That Counts!



Swingout Tailgate - one side engine and engine components service. Easy access to oil cooler and radiator (which are well protected). No need to raise lift arms.

Operator Friendly. You'll find the 7753 offers easy operator entry/exit into a roomy cab.

Dependable drive chains that NEVER need adjusting. The "bow tie" design uses prestressed, heavy-duty drive chains in two short continuous loops per side. That means long-life in the most rugged use and NO periodic, time-consuming drive chain adjustments.

Easy-to-use foot pedals control loader hydraulic functions, while two steering levers allow precise maneuverability.

Durable axles! Bobcat 7753 axles are solidly built then specially heat treated. Axle Bearings NEVER need greasing because a sealed oil bath keeps them lubricated. New axle hub design protects axle seal from damage from wire or twine. Hub is easily removed if service is required.

Experience America's Best.

Melroe company has over 30 years of skid-steer loader experience — longer than anyone else. That's one of the reasons Fortune Magazine has twice recognized the Bobcat loader as one of the 100 products "America Builds Best."

Reliable Components.

Other than a few daily checks and fills, you can rely on the PERFORMANCE of the 7753 Bobcat. It has been designed and built with durability and low maintenance in mind.

Great Serviceability!

The Bobcat 7753 has been designed to be serviced quickly. For example, there's single-side access to the transversely-mounted engine, a lift-out oil cooler for easy cleaning and a tip-up cab to expose hydraulic and hydrostatic compon- entry. For repairs, the exclusive BOSS® System can help quickly diagnose system problems. These features, along with a factory-trained service technicians and "top-shelf" parts availability, mean your loader can be back on the job in no time.

TOTAL HAND CONTROL!
Dealer-Installed Option!

- Easy Wrist-Action Control.
- Push-Button Auxiliary Hydraulics For Total Hand Control. (Available only on 50 Series loaders. 40 Series loaders utilize foot pedal to activate auxiliary hydraulics.)

Robert Belt puts four 9600 Combines to work on about 20,000 acres every year for his custom-harvesting business. "It's amazing, but we've picked up jobs just because we were running John Deere 9600 Combines."

hours we put on them, now that's reliability!"

Productivity is just as important as reliability to Belt and his clients. And a Maximizer Combine's extra-wide feeder house, 26-inch-diameter cylinder, and high velocity Quadra-Flo™ cleaning system deliver it. "We can pick more corn than we can haul away," declares Belt. "We can really run a lot of crop through them and they'll do a good job of harvesting, all without breaking down."

Use the experience of a seasoned expert like Robert Belt to your advantage. See your John Deere dealer to put the reliability and productivity of your very own 9600 Maximizer Combine to work at harvest.

Grain Prices May Affect Crop Inputs This Spring

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Grain prices this planting season could influence farmers to apply more inputs to their crops than normal, but farmers should consider the environment and economics, according to Ohio State University agronomists.

"This year, because of the high grain prices, some growers will take more preventative actions instead of letting things go and only treating if a need arises," said Peter Thomison.

For example, growers who don't typically use a starter fertilizer of nitrogen, phosphorous and potassium might this year as insurance. With corn near $5, growers feel less inhibited by the cost of production than in the past, because even a slight increase in yield will pay for increased inputs, Thomison said.

Farmers should only apply input levels that help the crop, said Jay Johnson, Ohio State soil fertility specialist. An excessive amount of nitrogen — greater than 300 pounds per acre in corn — can cause a depression in yield, and there's the potential environmental concern of excessive nitrates in the soil to consider.

Too much phosphorous in corn can suppress uptake of zinc, slowing down growth and development. Excessive potassium suppresses uptake of magnesium, reducing feed quality of forage and stock quality in grain production, Johnson said.

Growers should consider tow factors when deciding input levels, Johnson said. First, soil tests tell growers what nutrients a soil needs or doesn't need. Second, the history of a field should establish its yield potential.

High grain prices may cause farmers to risk trying nontraditional crop amendments, such as algae or seaweed, to increase yield. Universities have tested more than 600 of these products, and very few of them have ever proven to have any benefit in crop production, Johnson said.

"The economics is whether or not you wantn to buy something with a low probability of return, and that's an individual decision," Johnson said.

Such factors as timely rain and cool summer temperatures will have more impact on yield than most things a farmer does, Johnson said.

CORN SUBSTITUTES

Anyone who has had to buy corn lately knows that the price has climbed to unrecognizable levels.

The hog industry has been struggling for months and producers desparately hope for a big boost in hog prices to cover their cost of feed. What to do in the meantime?

Over the short run, there are a few alternatives. As small grains reach harvest, we may get an additional breather. What follows is a list of corn substitutes — most are too expensive to consider, some are barely competive.

Approximate values are given for each feedstuff, considering expected changes in hog performance, and corn at $5.55/bushel and 48 percent soybean meal at $285 per ton. (The approximate value of an ingredient must be equal to or greater than its actual market price to be competitive with corn).

Nutrient compositions are provided for the less-common ingredients.

Corn Gluten Feed

Corn gluten feed, a by-product of the corn processing industry, contains 21 percent protein, 8.5 percent crude fiber, and .60 percent lysine. Some studies with corn gluten feed show that up to 400 pounds of corn gluten feed can be used for growing pigs without affecting performance, while others show that as little as 200 pounds can signficantly reduce growth rate and feed conversion.

When using corn gluten feed, substitute up to 200 pounds for 175 pounds of corn and 25 pounds of soybean meal. Approximate value of corn gluten feed: $.085/pound. Actual market price: $.09/pound.

Hominy Feed

Hominy is roughly equal to corn in feeding value for pigs. It will be slightly higher in crude protein, crude fiber, and oil compared to corn. So the total energy value (kcal/pound) is similar to that of corn.

Some studies have shown that growth performance is slightly higher on hominy diets. When using hominy, simply substitute it pound for pound for corn using no more than 1,000 pounds/ton. Approximate value of hominy feed: $.09/pound. Actual market price: $.0925/pound.

Drawbacks to using hominy feed: Since the grain has already been milled, the oil contained in the material is subject to oxidative rancidity which may cause feed consumption to drop. If the grain was processed weeks before arrival on your farm, especially during hot weather, it may already be rancid.

So before you take delivery, take a sniff of it. If it has a fresh aroma, you're safe. But try to use up the inventory within 14 days.

Also, the grain is higher in oil than corn, and since the oil is unsaturated, more than 1,000 pounds per ton can produce soft carcasses. This may shorten shelf life for the final pork product, and the packer often objects to soft carcasses as well.

Barley

Make pound for pound substitutions with corn. If more than 1,000 pounds are included per ton, you'll observe slower growth rates and a reduction in feed efficiency, and the diet should be at least 10 percent cheaper than a typical corn-soybean meal diet.

Approximate value of barley: $3.65/bushels. Actual market price: $4/bushel (new crop).

Wheat

For each 100 pounds of wheat added, remove 98 pounds of corn and up to 2 pounds of soybean meal.

Performance will be nearly identical to that of corn, so the wheat diet should cost no more than the corn diet.

Sorghum (milo)

Make pound for pound substitutions with corn. If all the corn is removed, the sorghum diet should be at least 5 percent cheaper to make it feasible. Approximate value of milo: $9/cwt. Actual market price: unknown.

Oats

For each 100 pounds of oats added, remove 95 pounds of corn and 5 pounds of soybean meal. Add a maximum of 500 pounds of oats. When 500 pounds of oats are added, the oat diet should be at least 5 percent cheaper than the all corn ration to make it pay.

Approximate value of oats: $3.15/bushel. Actual market price: $2.75/bushel.

Corn Distillers Dried Grains

For each 100 pounds of corn distillers added, remove 12 pounds of soybean meal and 88 pounds of corn. Use a maximum of 200 pounds per ton.

Performance will be roughly the same on either diet, so the corn distillers diet should cost no more than the corn-soy diet.

Approximate value of corn distillers dried grains: $200/ton. Actual market price: $200/ton.

Sunflower Seeds

Sunflower seeds contain about 19 percent protein, 15 percent fiber, and about .59 percent lysine. Up to 200 pounds can be used per ton to replace 180 pounds of corn and 20 pounds of soybean meal, with little effects on performance.

Approximate value of sunflower seeds: $.09/pound. Actual market price: unknown.

Drawbacks to using sunflowers: Because sunflowers contain a lot of oil, they may decrease carcass firmness. Avoid using more than 400 pounds per ton.

Naked (Hulless) Oats

Hulless oats are not much different in composition than rolled oats. Protein content varies from 13 to 17 percent.

Lysine levels range from .50 to .70 percent. Up to 1,000 pounds of hulless oats can be included in the diet, subsituting for about 850 pounds of corn and about 150 pounds of soybean meal with only minor effects on performance.

More soybean meal can be removed with the addition of synthetic lysine. Approximate value of hulless oats: $.095/pound. Actual market price: unknown.

Drawbacks to hulless oats: When feeds contain more than 1,000 pounds per ton of finely ground naked oats, bridging in the feeder and decreased palatability may be observed.

Pearl Millet

Pearl millet contains 15.7 percent protein and .35 percent lysine. Experiments show that performance is not affected when millet is used to replace all the corn and 50 pounds of the soybean meal in a 1-ton diet.

Approximate value of pearl millet: $.09/pound. Actual market price: unknown.

Performance or carcass value may be affected when by-products exceed 800 pounds/ton, especially if they contain high levels of salt or fat.

Approximate value of bakery by-products: $100/ton. Actual market price: varies by product and location.

Liquid Whey

Liquid whey is available free of charge from many cheese processors because of its high disposal cost. You can offer sweet whey through the water system instead of water, and feed a corn diet fortified only with vitamins and minerals (add 150 pounds of soybean meal per ton when using acid whey).

Research shows that pigs from 40 pounds to market weight consuming whey perform similar to those on a normal corn soy diet. Approximate value of liquid whey: $.01-.02/gallon. Actual market price: usually available for the cost of transportation.

Note that spoilage can reduce intake and may lead to health problems.

Outdated Milk

Milk can be fed at the rate of 1 gallon per head per day. Offer a normal diet in the feeder. As pigs grow older they'll adjust their own diet by increasing their intake from the feeder.

Approximate value of outdated milk: $.20-.25/gal. Actual market price: usually available for the cost of transportation.

Fat

Fat is an excellent energy source since it contains two and a quarter times the calories of either proteins or carbohydrates. Add no more than 5 percent fat to prevent significant increases in carcass fat. Note that if the fat is unsaturated (for example, french frier oil) the carcass will become soft.

Approximate value of fat: $.19/pound. Actual market price: $.17-.19/pound.

Summary

1. There are a few ingredients that you can use to subsitute for corn, but none will save you a lot of money.

2. Be ready for good buys (if there are any) during harvest of small grains.

3. Hope for good weather in the Midwest.

ALLENTOWN FAIR ANNOUNCES GRANDSTAND LINEUP

ALLENTOWN (Lehigh Co.) — Like the old Donny and Marie Show tune, this year's musical offerings at The Great Allentown Fair will be "a little bit country and a little bit rock 'n' roll." The Aug. 27-Sept. 2 exposition has announced all six of its major concerts and the dates tickets go on sale.

Following the traditional kick-off demolition derby at the grandstand Tuesday, Aug. 27, musical devotees can look forward to Wynonna with special guest BlackHawk on Wednesday, Aug. 28; Travis Tritt and Marty Stuart on Thursday, Aug. 29; Gin Blossoms and Goo Goo Dolls on Friday, Aug. 30; Brooks & Dunn with special guest David Lee Murphy on Saturday, Aug. 31; Crosby, Stills & Nash on Sunday, Sept. 1; and Michael Bolton on Labor Day Monday, Sept. 2. All concerts are at 7:30 p.m.

Tickets go on sale for the Fair's first alternative rock band pairing, the Gin Blossoms and the Goo Goo Dolls, starting on Saturday, May 11. Country music fans can buy tickets to all three of the Fair's country shows starting on Tuesday, May 14. Tickets for the last two shows of Fair week, Crosby, Stills & Nash and Michael Bolton, go on sale starting Thursday, May 16.

Earlier this year, the Gin Blossoms followed their double-platinum breakthrough album, "New Miserable Experience," with a new album, "Congratulations I'm Sorry." It has produced the current top-play single, "Follow You Down." The Goo Goo Dolls are coming off a highly successful tour with fellow rock band Bush.

When she plays the Fair in August, Wynonna will be resuming her "revelations" world tour after the expected June birth of her second child. This will be her fourth Fair appearance, but only the second as a solo artist minus her mother/partner Naomi with whom she comprised the acclaimed country duo, The Judds. Her opening act, BlackHawk, is a young, "new country" trio with two top-selling albums and a number one single "Every Once In A While."

The Fair stop on the 70-city Double Trouble Tour, reuniting Travis Tritt and Marty Stuart, promises to offer a three-hour, high-energy performance. While each artist will do a solo set, both of their bands will be on stage at the same time for jamming sessions.

The dynamic duo of last year's Fair, Brooks & Dunn, are coming back for their encore performance with a whole new show. Having won every major music award as country's best duo, Kix Brooks and Ronnie Dunn just released their fourth album, "Borderline," this month. Their opening act, David Lee Murphy, is cruising on the heels of "Party Crowd," his 1995 hit single that's become a country party anthem.

An evening with Crosby, Stills & Nash provides the classic rock element to the Fair's line-up. The harmonious trio will do timeless songs like "Suite: Judy Blue Eyes," "Our House" and "Teach Your Children."

Mega pop star Michael Bolton will close the Fair with his brand of Labor Day fireworks. His show includes a 10-year retrospective of his greatest hits set to pyrotechnic stage production.

Tickets for the six musical concerts vary but range in price from $21-$28. Half-priced Fair admission tickets will be available for $2, until August 28. Special box office hours are 9 a.m.-4 p.m. on Saturday, May 11; 8 a.m.-7 p.m. on Tuesday, May 14; 1-7 p.m. on Wednesday, May 15; 8 a.m.-7 p.m. on Thursday, May 16 and 1-7 p.m. on Friday, May 17. Thereafter, the Box Office remains open Saturdays from 10 a.m.-2 p.m.

Tickets will also be available at Ticketmaster outlets or may be charged by phone by calling (215) 336-2000 or (717) 693-4100. For mail ordering or other information, call (610) 435-SHOW (7469).

Very Tough Call: Destroy Or Not Destroy?

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Widespread winter injury to Ohio's soft red winter wheat is leaving many farmers with the tough decision about whether to tear up the crop, said an Ohio State University plant pathologist.

Pat Lipps said Ohio's wheat is in such bad shape, production losses are inevitable. "We're looking at probably the worst winter injury I've seen in 15 years," he said.

However, farmers should think long and hard about the decision to tear up wheat and planting corn, said Allan Lines, an Ohio State agricultural economist. The decision is not easy to make. Farmers should first make sure they can honor any forward contracts they have for wheat, Lines said. Farmers should not think they have to buy wheat to fill the contracts because supplies will be scarce, and prices will be high.

Another point is that farmers tearing up wheat are hedging a big bet the growing season will come through with the kind of yields to make the switch worthwhile, Lines said. Farmers losing one-fourth to one-third of their wheat will need at least a 120-bushel-per-acre crop to offset the price difference, he said.

"There is the possibility of bad weather playing havoc with corn as the summer matures," Lines said. "Tearing up a 40-bushel-per-acre wheat crop only to harvest an 80-bushel-per-acre corn crop doesn't make any sense."

Generally, Ohio's wheat planted by the normal fall sowing date fared reasonably well, Lipps said. However, some farmers got behind on wheat sowings due to delays in the harvesting of other crops. As a result, the late-seeded crop was left vulnerableto the winter's rigors, particularly in patches of poorly drained soils, he said.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture rated 27 percent of Ohio's winter wheat as good or excellent as of April 15. A fair rating went to 45 percent of the wheat, while 28 percent got a poor rating.

The nature of Ohio's damage often consists of large patches of poorly growing or dead wheat in otherwise healthy fields. This gives farmers the unenviable judgment call about whether the loss is severe enough to warrant tearing up the field and planting something else, Lipps said.

Even university specialists are shying away from giving general recommendations, because the extent of damage is so specific to the field, Lipps said.

The basic rule of thumb is that less than eight to 12 plants per square foot of the entire field indicates a yield loss, Lipps said. The decision to tear up wheat is easier if a large portion of the field, perhaps 70 percent, is that way.

However, this year has seen many marginal cases short of the classical situation just described.

Lipps' best advice is not to stop planned field work for other crops in order to tend to those marginal wheat fields. Farmers should get on with other field work, and wait until late April or early May to see if marginal fields recover, he said.

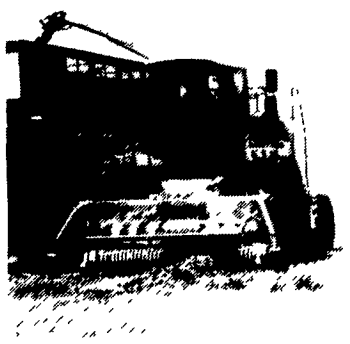
Forage Harvesters Have High HP

NEW HOLLAND (Lancaster Co.) — The new Models FX25 and FX45 self-propelled forage harvesters from New Holland are high-horsepower, heavy-duty units for custom operators and large acreage livestock and dairy operations.

Thirty-inch cutterheads witdh 12 full-width, reversible, spiral knives have huge capacity, said New Holland product management. Wide windrow pickups and four- or six-row crop heads let the machines clear large acreages in minimal time.

The "FX25" has 320 HP and the Model FX45 is powered by a 450 HP six-cylinder diesel. Both new "forage express" harvesters are available with on-board roller mill processing units to crush corn grains before they enter the blower. The processor module is easily removed for haylage and other green feed harvesting. Crop flow lines through the wide throat opening, feedrolls and cutterhead are short and direct.



The new Models FX25 and FX45 self-propelled New Holland forage harvesters are heavy-duty high-horsepower units for custom operators and large-acreage dairy and livestock operations.

Cabs on the new harvesters have unsurpassed visibility, air-suspension seats plus a buddy seat and a low-noise 79db(A) sound rating. Knife sharpening and shearbar adjustments are quick and can be accomplished without leaving the cab. Discharge spouts rotate 210 degrees to let operators fill trucks or wagons on the go with less spillage. Fuel tank capacity at 210 gallons assures a full day's work without time off for refueling.

Gehl Reports Record First Quarter

WEST BEND, Wis. — Gehl Company (NASDAQ: GEHL) announced record first quarter 1996 net income of $1.9 million, or $.31 per share, a 5 percent increase from 1995's first quarter net income of $1.8 million, or $.29 per share.

Income before taxes in the first quarter of 1996 was $2.3 million, a 25 percent increase over the $1.8 million of income before taxes in the first quarter of 1995. The majority of the company's net operating loss carryforwards were utilized in years prior to 1996; consequently, taxes were provided at a rate of 17.5 percent in the first quarter of 1996 versus a rate of only 1.4 percent in comparable 1995.

William D. Gehl, president and chief executive officer, said, "We are very pleased to have achieved record first quarter earnings in 1996. The continued strength of demand for the company's construction products, which has exceeded even our own expectations, has enabled our strong performance. We view the balance of 1996 with cautious optimism, and intend to continue our efforts to control costs, improve efficiencies, and reduce accounts receivable and debt."

The 1996 first quarter net sales of $39.2 million were 2 percent greater than 1995's $38.3 million. Sales of agriculture equipment were $22.1 million, 9 percent below 1995's first quarter sales of $24.2 million.

While increasing seasonally during the first quarter of 1996, accounts receivable were reduced $6.4 million (8 percent) from a year ago.

Operating activities used $3.2 million of cash in the first quarter of 1996 as a result of the seasonal increases in accounts receivable. This compared favorably to the $7.4 million of cash used by operations in 1995's first quarter. The company's long-term debt outstanding of $51.3 million has been reduced $12.6 million (20 percent) over the past 12 months. The company's capitalization ratio was 47.4 percent at March 30, 1996, as compared to 57 percent a year earlier.

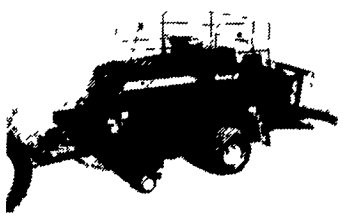
Heavy Silage No Match For Baler

RACINE, Wis. — The new Case IH 8575 mid-size baler is designed to handle the rigors of high-moisture silage baling with ease.

Heavier drive and feeding components make the 8575 baler ideal for high load silage baling and provide added performance and durability in normal dry-baling conditions.

"The 8575 has significant improvements to the base machine," said David Hess, Case Corporation manager, new livestock production products. "Also, an optional new bale ejector and roller chute enable an operator to efficiently bale high-moisture silage bales. It's specifically designed for high-moisture hay applications."

But those improvements and others aren't only effective for high moisture baling.



The Case IH 8575 baler is designed for high productivity and durability, especially in high-moisture crops.

"By tailoring the machine's durability to high-moisture applications," Hess said, "overall baling performance for dry hay is markedly increased as well. This will really appeal to custom operators or others who typically bale large tonnage."

The bale size is still 31.5 x 34.4 inches and bale length is variable up to 98 inches.

Heavier stuffer and drive components, such as larger diameter pins and bushings, crank and stuffer arm, give the 8575 greater durability especially for silage baling, Hess noted. Many of these components are the same size and material used on the big model 8580 so overall machine reliability is really enhanced.

"High-moisture crops are heavier and put a great deal of stress on a baler during silage baling," Hess said. "The 8575 was designed specifically with that in mind and meets the needs of heavy-baling operations bale after bale. The heavily-loaded feeding components and overload protective parts have been strengthened."

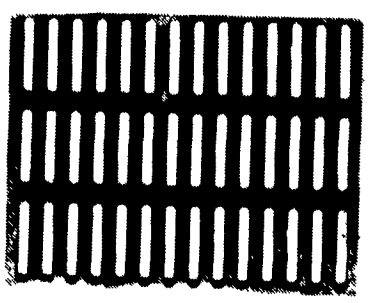
Cast Iron Flooring Available

LEBANON (Lebanon Co.) — Tri-County Confinment Systems, Incorporated, recently announced the introduction of a new flooring system product for nursery and farrowing operations.

The "Sure-Step" Cast Iron Flooring is offered in two styles: "Raised Cast Iron" and "Sure-Step Cast Iron," each available in two sizes, 6-inch x 24-inch or 12-inch x 24-inch.

The cast iron sections were developed to be used in combination with "Sure-Step" Plastic Flooring, providing superior traction for both sows and piglets in the farrowing room.

Utilizing plastic flooring under the sow and cast iron under piglets meets the comfort and temperature requirements of both. Ease of cleaning, drier floor areas, and a longer surface life because of wear resistance are additional benefits of the new cast iron product.



Tri-County Confinement Systems, Incorporated, recently announced the introduction of a new flooring system product for nursery and farrowing operations.

"Sure-Step" Cast Flooring installs flat with the plastic flooring. The "Raised" Cast Flooring sits one inch higher than the plastic flooring when installed side by side.

Package Built Around Side-Mount Pump

DEKALB, Ill. — A.O. Smith Harvestore Products, Inc. (AOSHPI) introduces a new high performance agitation package for the Slurrystore structure, the Agitation System 1200. This package is built around a more powerful side mount pump and an optional slurry valve switching/floor agitation system.

Two models of new side mount pumps are available. The Model 1220 features a 20.1-inch diameter impeller and requires 120 HP to operate. The Model 1218 offers an 18.5-inch diameter impeller and needs 90 HP input. Both feature components galvanized for longer life, repositioned drain port for easier winterization of pump, five-vane impeller for increased power, reinforced 12-inch valve slide designed for effective shut-off, 6-inch bronze valves, and a redesigned spreader load stand.

- Slow rotating agitator spreads material with minimal damage.

A new line of high accuracy twin disc spreaders has been released providing precise, high output spreading.

The new line of ADS spreaders cover working widths of 30 to 40 feet with a payload of 1,800 pounds. The ADS spreaders adapt instantly to many different spreading applications without the need for special tools, including normal spreading, topdressing, and boarder spreading either right or left.

We hear you.

Like most aspects of farming, baling has changed dramatically over the last 20 years. Once it involved rounding up a bunch of kids to load wagons; slowly, it has evolved into the era of one man and big round bales. And now, in response to your requests, this evolution continues.

With continued improvements, the Case IH 8570 mid-sized rectangular baler and its big brother, the 8580 large rectangular baler, make baling more convenient than ever. Both are proof that we do indeed hear you.

These machines produce a bale size and weight up to 1,000 lbs. for the 8570 and 2,200 lbs. for the 8580 that's easy to stack, store, transport and feed.

Formed with easy-separating flakes, these bales can be fed by hand, processed, or pulled apart by livestock. They're tight and dense for handling and shipping ease. And thanks to the design of the 8500 Series balers, they're packed with nutrition.

A wide, low-profile pickup reduces the loss of valuable leaves, while the pre-packer chamber keeps nutrients contained within the bale. And each pre-formed flake is exceptionally uniform in size and weight.

The Case IH 8570 and 8580 rectangular balers. You asked for an evolution in baling, and we heard you. Find out more from your Case IH dealer today.

RESPIRATORY AND OTHER HAZARDS RELATED TO POULTRY PRODUCTION

Dr. Dennis Murphy
Professor of Agriculture and Biological Engineering

Burning eyes, runny nose, scratchy throat, and excessive coughing. If you are experiencing these symptoms and are a poultry farmer, you may have a condition worse than a stubborn cold.

Your symptoms may be caused by inhaling too much dust while working in confined poultry housing. The dust comes from bird feathers and dander, dried urine and feces, insect parts, and feed grains. Harmful molds, bacteria, and endotoxins may also attach themselves to these tiny invisible particles.

Poultry house host has the potential for creating serious respiratory problems. Microscopic particles known as "respirable dust" are tiny enough to bypass the body's built-in filters in the nostrils and bronchial tubes , and then enter the lungs. There they are easily absorbed, causing irritation, reducing the lungs breathing efficiency, and potentially leading to acute and chronic bronchitis, asthma, pulmonary disease, organic dust toxic syndrome (ODTS), histoplasmosis, or another condition known as pneumoconiosis.

Although it is easy to take breathing for granted, the air that a person inhales during a year weighs more than the food or drink he or she may consume in the same period of time. If that air is contaminated by common levels of poultry house dust, it is dangerous.

Good management practices and regular ventilation can help reduce the levels of toxic dust, but to protect yourself, always use an air-purifying respirator approved by the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH). The common, disposable nuisance dust mask, with a single elastic strap and often sold by the box, is not effective at filtering the most harmful dust in poultry confinement housing.

Unlike other farm accident victims, respiratory hazard victims may not notice their symptoms for years. Caught in the early stages, the effects can be reversed. And, of course, Preventing respiratory disease is better than any treatment.

Another hazard poultry workers may face is contact with bird carcasses. Maggots infesting the decaying bodies may transmit disease. Remove dead birds from the house on a regular basis to an incinerator, disposal pit, or whatever approved means is used to dispose of mortalities. If you compost poultry carcasses, locate the compost bin away from other farm buildings and monitor the internal temperature to ensure proper decomposition and to prevent spontaneous combustion.

Fire and electrical hazards are present in all farm buildings. All switches, circuit breakers, water controllers, fuses, and relays should be dust and water-tight. Enclosures and holes should be sealed and caulked to make them dust and water-tight. Sparking equipment, dimmed lights, or fuses that blow out or breakers that trip consistently are warningd of electrical problems. Regularly check and correct these hazards to prevent electrical shock or fire. Construct brooder or laying houses with fire-resistant insulation material.

Feeding equipment and other machinery such as augers and grinders present another set of hazards. Chains, belts, augers, and rotating shafts should be guarded to prevent feet, hands, or clothing from becoming entangled. Never use machinery such as automatic feeding, egg gathering, egg processing, or pit cleaning equipment unless guards are in place. Ground all equipment , inspect cords for fraying, and replace any deteriorated cords.

Finally, the most often overlooked hazard: overdoing it. Don't try to do more than you are physically capable of doing. What may seem like a way to save a few minutes now may cost you several working days recuperating from a strained back or some other injury. When lifting heavy objects such as feed bags, egg crates, or crates of birds, use your legs, not your back. If an object is too heavy for one person, get help. Use equipment designed for lifting heavy objects whenever possible.

Incorporate sefety practices into all your farm work. Use personal protective equipment whenever you enter a hazardous environment, follow management practices that reduce the buildup of hazardous dust, maintain a safe electrical system, guard machinery, and use common sense when lifting heavy objects.

Extension Agents Visit Ag Department

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — The Pennsylvania Association of County Agricultural Agents recently met with the Pennsylvania Agriculture Secretary Charles C. Brosius.

Other staff members of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture were also present, including Executive Deputy Secretary Walter Peechatka; Deputy Secretary for Regulatory Programs Christian Herr; and Deputy Secretary for Marketing, Promotion, and Program Service Russell Redding.

There were many agriculture issues discussed at the meeting. It was noted that cooperative extension and the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture has always had a good working relationship.

The Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture plans to expand its technoloty by establishing a pesticide system with an 800 number. They are also looking into an Internet Web site for agriculture information in the state.

The new USDA Farm Bill was discussed. Some of Pennsylvania's agriculture programs will be impacted by the Farm Bill. Programs on rural development, farmland preservation, and marketing and promotion will receive funding. The dairy price support program will gradually end by the year 1999. There will also be a consolidation of the federal milk marketing orders.

Prior to the meeting with Secretary Brosius and his staff, the directors of the Pennsylvania Association of County Agricultural Agents held a board meeting. Plans for the 1997 National Meeting in Burlington, Vt. were top on their agenda. Pennsylvania is presently conducting a major fund raising campaign to help the Northeast states support this meeting.

There was also discussion of the state Galaxy Conference to be held in May. New Penn State University President Graham Spanier will be the keynote speaker.

4-H'ers Learn Inner Workings Of Government At Capitol Days

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — About 150 4-H members throughout the state learned about the inner workings of state government here recently during 4-H Capitol Days.

During the two-day event, 4-H'ers toured a state agency, visited the Hershey area, attended a breakfast meeting with their legislators, and toured the capitol.

The breakfast with state legislators was the highlight of the event. The lawmakers and 4-H members discussed local issues, how new laws are established, and the purposes of the 4-H educational youth program. The 4-H'ers also discussed issues and concerns and shared their ideas about the 4-H program.

The 4-H'ers also participated in a simulation in which teams had to develop and present proposals for grant money that could help fund agency projects. The simulation enhances understanding of government activities and promotes the development of communication, teamwork, and organizational skills.

State 4-H Capitol Days is a part of the Penn State Cooperative Extension youth citizenship program. Since the annual event was established in 1966, more than 6,000 4-H members from throughout Pennsylvania have participated in this opportunity to learn more about Pennsylvania's government.

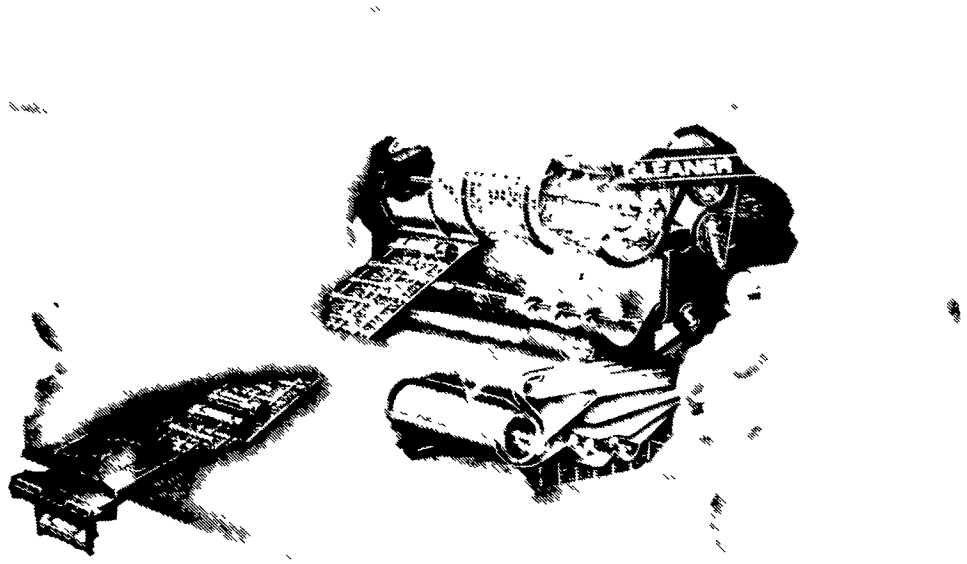
The Heart And Soul Of GLEANER®

Our Natural Flow System Treats Your Grain Gently.

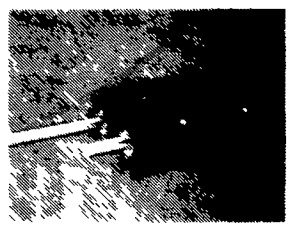
The unique transverse mounting of the Natural Flow processing cylinder moves your crop in a ribbon-like fashion from the concave through the cage. Your crop never changes direction before threshing, giving you higher grain quality and a better return at the elevator.

Nobody Beats Our System.

Instead of making your grain twist and turn, our unloading system has a long reach auger which gives safe clearance into trucks and wagons, even on hilly terrain. Our new grain sample door is conveniently located on the front panel of the grain tank which provides quick, safe access to obtain a grain sample. The grain trough delivers grain right to the sample area for increased safety and convenience. Other grain tank features include a full grain tank indicator, and warning buzzer and light on the overhead panel to alert you when it's time to unload.

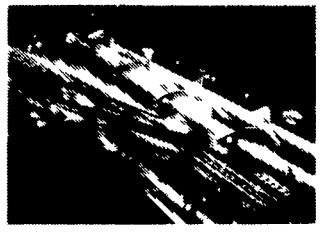


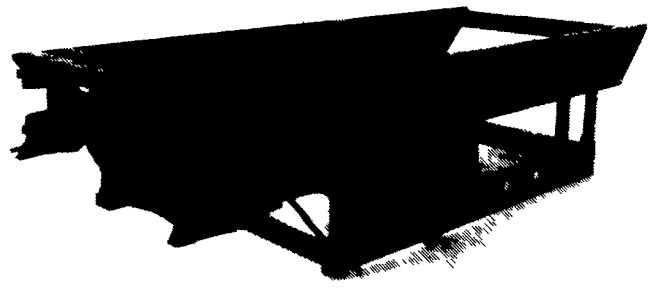
Get Maximum Cleaning Power.



Accelerator Rolls. A GLEANER® exclusive, timed rubber accelerator rolls rotate in opposite directions, speeding grain downward through a high-velocity air blast for maximum pre-cleaning and better sidehill operation.

Distribution Augers. This unique feature provides uniform delivery of material to the accelerator rolls for outstanding hillside performance. One auger on R42/R52, two on R62/R72.





One-piece, All-welded Frame. All GLEANER combines start out with this unshakable mainframe that helps keep shafts, bearings and sprockets in true alignment.

Medical Researcher, Pulitzer Prize Winner Highlight Event

RAPID CITY, S.D. — An international group of leading researchers on human and animal growth will open the annual meeting of the American Society of Animal Science here Monday, July 22.

The opening session of a symposium on animal growth on Monday evening features Robert Church, former dean of research at the University of Calgary Medical School, molecular geneticist, longtime rancher, beef packer and biotechnology entrepreneur.

"Dr. Church's background gives him an excellent perspective on where growth biology research should be directed," said Alan Bell, Cornell University animal scientist and planning chairman of the society's growth symposium.

Jon Franklin, a Pulitzer Prize-winning science writer, will close the symposium Tuesday afternoon with a discussion of the growing split between the scientific community and the non-technological population, the social costs of that split, and the ease with which exaggerated fears of genetic engineering, synthetic hormones, and chemicals can be manipulated by the press and some scientists. Franklin, who received his Pulitzer Prizes for investigative reporting of controversial issues on science and technology, is known for his defense of science by speaking out against movements such as animal rights activism and environmental Extremeism.

Franklin's presentation will also double as the opening address for the American Society of Animal Science. The symposium serves as a prelude to the annual scientific meeting of the society. The meeting will attract more than 1,700 researchers, industry representatives, extension specialists, and students from around the world. The symposium concludes on the afternoon of Tuesday, July 23. The scientific meeting opens that evening and concludes on Friday, July 26.

Sire Summary On World Wide Web

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The 1996 Hereford Sire Summary is available to cattlemen internationally through the Internet.

Published by the American Hereford Association (AHA) and the University of Missouri-Columbia, the 1996 edition is the first interactive breed summary to be made available to cattlemen worldwide.

Purebred and commercial producers can access the Hereford data at the Internet site http://www.missouri.edu/~ansbeef/hereford/.

"The uniqueness of this sire summary data on the Web is the interaction it allows the producer," said Dr. John Hough, AHA's director of research and performance records, and Dr. William Herring, University of Missouri geneticist and animal breeding scientist, co-developers of the site. "Cattlemen can actually set their EPD parameters for each of the traits and let the program search and find the bulls that will fit."

The listing contains 4,662 Hereford sires, with data analyzed from U.S. and Canadian herds, making it a true North American Sire Summary. Highly proven sires are included as are younger sires with a minimum of 15 progeny.

The summary contains not only Expected Progeny Differences (EPDs) and accuracies as in traditional sire summaries, but also includes the number of progeny and herds, as well as number of daughters for each sire.

Printed copies are also available by contacting AHA at P.O. Box 014059, Kansas City, MO 64101, (816) 842-3757.

New Way To Use Ultrasound

AMES, Iowa — Ultrasound has been used for a number of years in the hog industry to help determine carcass composition in individual animals. Now research at Iowa State University may lead to expanded use of the technology.

Kevin Ragland, a graduate research assistant in the ISU animal science department, compared ultrasound and carcass measurements as predictors of carcass composition. He said the goal of the project was to determine whether the gathering of loin muscle measurements could be made more efficient. Researchers must measure loin muscle area by counting dots on a grid system as carcasses hang in the cooler.

Ragland outlined the results in a presentation at the Midwest meeting of the American Society of Animal Science in Des Moines on March 20.

"Until now, researchers have determined the size of the loin muscle with acetate tracings and a standard pork grid," he said. "But my theory was that perhaps a more efficient job could be done of determining carcass composition by using ultrasound to scan carcass depth and/or length measurements of the loin muscle."

The research involved 352 pigs, including 281 purebreds and 71 crossbreds. There were 214 barrows and 138 gilts in the group.

The live animals were scanned by a real-time ultrasonic machine 24 hours prior to slaughter. At 24 hours after slaughter, backfat thickness was measured and acetate tracings were taken of the loins.

Ragland then compared the ultrasonic readings with the physical carcass measurements, and found a high correlation between the two. "The results suggest that scan loin depth and length measurements, when combined with sex, breed effects and live weight, can serve as accurate predictors of carcass composition," he said.

Folk Wisdom Proves Animal Behavior Can Predict Weather

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — Human beings, often comfortably cocooned in heated homes and climate-controlled cars, are continually surprised by abrupt changes in the weather, and one Penn State animal expert believes people should look to the barnyard for weather cues.

Stanley Curtis, professor of animal sciences in the College of Agricultural Sciences, said animals have always been well attuned to changes in temperature, air pressure, and wind.

For example, horses can sense earthquakes and distant storms because they possess exceptional hearing in the lower frequency ranges. Sheep huddling together forecast rain, because the animals are sensitive to air pressure changes and tend to gather together to keep warm as the cold front passes. The sight of cows scratching their ears can predict a storm because the hairs in a cow's ear are sensitive to low pressure and humidity.

Curtis said there's even a scientific name for such phenomena: meteorotropisms.

"All animals have the potntial to be sensitive to weather events, including human beings," Curtis said.

"A century ago, we had to be a lot more mindful of the weather because we had to prepare for its consequences," he said. "Today, we can manage our environment with furnaces and air-conditioning and electric blankets. As America became more technologically sophisticated and urbanized, people became less sensitive to weather as well as less observant of how animals react to weather."

Curtis, who has done extensive research on animal behavior and environmental physiology, points out that Europeans are much more in tune with how animals react to weather changes, perhaps because climate control technology is less pervasive there. Indeed, many of the folk sayings, like "expect the weather to be fair when crows fly in pairs" or "if a rooster crows at night, he's saying rain is in sight," originated in Europe.

A bright spot peeking through the clouds for behavioral scientists is that people are beginning to approach animals as more than just commodities or cheap labor. "When America was primarily rural there were stronger bonds between humans and animals, in part because people spent much of their time on the farm and with their animals. Also, farmers needed as much information on the weather as they could get," Curtis said. "Today, we're approaching that bond from another direction. We are coming to recognize the connections among all living things."

Curtis lists some meteorotropisms that could come in handy for rural residents and travelers who can put down their cellular phones long enough to sneak a peek out the window as they speed past farmland.

•Horses always face away from the direction of the wind, huddling together, Curtis says. Because low pressure systems are usually preceded by strong winds, huddled horses are a good indicator of a big storm brewing.

•Cows will try to stay ahead of an approaching storm. If a large group of cattle is clearly on the move, chances are good rain is on the way.

•Cows are also creatures of habit, usually drinking, eating, and moving at the same time every day. If cows suddenly break their routine by bunching, or moving in large groups, the weather is probably due to change.

Curtis said there is at least one thing that animals know instinctively that humans could learn, although it might mean fewer invitations to the neighbor's pool-side party.

"In hot weather, animals wallowing in a mudhole will provide more relief than a dip into water," Curtis said. The reason is that most water will drip off, and the effects of evaporation, which cools the body, will be short-lived. Mud is mostly water but it takes much longer to evaporate and prolongs the cooling process."

Arabian Festival Equals Family Fun

YORK (York Co.) — You are invited to come spend the day with some of the finest Arabian horses in Pennsylvania.

The South Central District of the Pennsylvania Arabian Horse Association is sponsoring its annual Arabian Festival on May 11 at the York Fairgrounds. Several horse activities will be happening throughout the day from 9 a.m. - 4 p.m.

Exhibitions that demonstrate the versatility of the Arabian breed will begin at 10 a.m. You will see costume horses, freestyle reining, driving, side saddle, and many more.

Added this year is a Breyer Model Horse Show where you can show your Breyer model in competition, just like in a real live horse show. Ribbons and trophies will be awarded.

Stallions, available for breeding, will be standing on Stallion Ave. These stallions represent a variety of nationally known bloodlines. If you are interested in owning an Arabian, be sure to check out Private Treaty Lane where several Arabians for sale will be located.

The Stick Horse Class is the association's way of introducing children to the Arabian show ring. Children under the age of 8 can compete for ribbons and prizes. The Stick Horse class is scheduled for 2 p.m.

Conference To Celebrate Training

ALFRED, N.Y. — The FARMEDIC Program, developed in 1981, will be celebrating 15 years of training providers to save lives.

With this in mind, Alfred State College will host on May 9-11, a FARMEDIC provider/instructor course at its facility, home of the FARMEDIC National Training Center.

Since 1981, the FARMEDIC Program has trained more than 10,000 providers from across the country. The program was started to train fire, rescue, and EMS personnel to be more knowledgeable of farm rescue procedures. Agriculture still ranks as the most hazardous industry in the nation.

"In the past 15 years," said Dave Hill, executive director of the FARMEDIC Program, "the FARMEDIC Program has accomplished what it set out to do to reduce death and injury from farm accidents, reduce the probability of injury or death to the rescuers, and to enhance awareness and cooperation between agricultural, fire, rescue, and EMS communities. All of this has been done through this training center."

Hill, along with co-founder Ted Halpin, lead instructor Dave Oliver, and senior instructor Rich Hoffman, have traveled to 46

states and Canada to train rescuers.

The three-day kcourse will offer instructors a refresher course and update and introduce new programs such as "silo rescue and firefighting awareness" and "first on the scene." Providers will also have the opportunity to share their experiences with one another. An extrication event will highlight the course by reminding participants of the importance of the program.

Any rescue, fire, and EMS personnel interested in attending the course should contact Dave Hill at Alfred State College, (800) 437-6010.

Leaders Develop Tools To Strengthen Programs

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Ensuring a strong future for agricultural education begins with building successful local programs that attract students and meet their needs.

The U.S. Department of Education and the National Council for Agricultural Education launched a year-long initiative in March to develop strategies and tools to ensure the success of local high school agriculture programs.

"This initiative is exciting because it doesn't just identify challenges facing agricultural education," said C. Coleman Harris, program specialist, agricultural education, U.S. Department of Educaton, and Local Program Success project coordinator. "It goes the next step and creates tangible resources local teachers can use immediately to improve their programs. The goal is to identify the most successful practices used by teachers across the country and combine them in one 'toolbox' for their use."

Local program success is directed by a national task force of agricultural education leaders, cochaired by Dr. Larry Case, coordinator, Agricultural & Rural Education, U.S. Department of Education, and Dr. Rosco Vaughn, executive director, National Council for Agricultural Education.

Work groups of successful teachers and university teacher educators, National FFA Organization staff members, and experts from other areas of education and agriculture are developing tools to help teachers succeed in six specific aspects of agricultural education: classroom and laboratory instruction; supervised agricultural experience programs; FFA; volunteers, allies, and partners; program planning and marketing; and teacher recruitment, development and retention. While the primary focus is on middle and secondary schools, the initiative also will address postsecondary and adult educational programming.

The task force will review work group proposals in July 1996 and present a recommendation to the National FFA Board of Directors for development of tools for local program success. The final product will be introduced to a team of agricultural educators from each state in February 1997 and delivered to local teachers shortly thereafter.

EASTERN TENT CATERPILLARS ARE HATCHING

Dr. Robert S. Hansen
Extension Forester

The eastern tent caterpillars have hatched or are in the process of hatching. Eastern tent caterpillars are one of the first tree insect pests to hatch in the spring. After they hatch, the larva being to feed on newly expanding leaves of a variety of ornamental trees.

They are most common on crab apples but they can also be found on some varieties of cherry and other members of the Rosaceae family. These insects begin to spin web-like tents that are found in branch crotches. This is probably their most noticeable characteristic. When they are small it is difficult to distinguish other characteristics.

These insects can completely defoliate a tree in a relatively short time. The best way to control these insects is with a pesticide of one kind or another. They are relatively easy to control at this stage of their life.

One type of pesticide that is effective is commonly known as "Bt." "Bt" is a biological pesticide that consists of a bacteria. The larva must eat the bacterial insecticide that has been sprayed on the leaves in order for it to be effective. It will not kill on contact. "Bt" is also somewhat specific as it will only kill members of the butterfly and moth family. "Bt" is commonly sold under the names Foray, Thuricide, Dipel, and Javelin. This pesticide should be sprayed over the entire tree.

Other registered pesticides for eastern tent caterpillar are: carbaryl (Sevin and Sevimol), chlorpyrifos (Dursband and Pageant DF), malathion, and insecticidal soap. These are chemical insecticides and do kill on contact.

The best way to control eastern tent caterpillar using these pesticides is to spray on the "tent" in the early morning hours. At this time, the larva congregate around and in the tent. If the tent is large it will help to open the tent with a knife and spray inside.

Avoid spraying these insecticides over the entire tree. These insecticides are less specific and will kill a wider variety of insects such as honey bees. Some of these chemicals can also cause blossoms to fall. Care should be taken when using these pesticides to limit the number of non-target insects that may be harmed.

Remember that when using these or any other pesticide, the label instructions must be followed exactly. To do otherwise is a violation of state and federal law. Remember to take appropriate safety precautions when using any pesticide.

Farm Safety Grants Available

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Applications for a statewide farm safety grant program are now being distributed as qualified organizations, according to Pennsylvania Agriculture Secretary Charles Brosius, who also serves as chairman of the Farm Safety and Occupational Health Advisory Board.

"Out goal is to reduce the number of serious farm accidents in Pennsylvania," he said. "This program provides grant money to fund educational or training projects that increase awareness of farm safety and occupational health issues in Pennsylvania, especially among our young people."

Accidental death rates are higher for farm workers than for workers in non-agricultural industries. "More emphasis needs to be given to farm safety education throughout the year so the loss of human lives and serious injuries may be stopped," Brosius said.

Farm safety grants up to $2,500 are available to farm organizations, volunteer fire companies, ambulance services and rescue squard for farm safety, occupational health, and emergency response programs.

Grants will be awarded annually to organizations based on the scope of the project and the number of people it benefits, the value of the project to the agricultural community and those who work directly with farm accident victims, and the impact upon rural youth, farmers, growers, or producers in the commonwealth.

June 14, 1996 is the deadline for the first round of applications to be received at the agricultural department. Board members will review the applications and notify applicants 30 days later whether or not their projects will receive funding.

For an application and list of program guidelines, call (717) 787-4843.

And they're reporting that their systems are delivering increased storage capacity, higher quality feed, faster unloading and reduced maintenance versus their old systems. Even in silos that had been retired! But don't take our word for it. Here's what your neighbor has to say about their B U C S System!

OWNER'S REPORT #57

After using our B U C S for one year we like the way it has worked overall. There are no doors to change, and little operating cost. We did away with the high maintenance costs and slow discharge rate of the old bottom unloader. B U C S discharges feed a lot faster.

"HOW WILL YOU BE STORING YOUR VALUABLE FORAGES AND GRAINS IN THE 21st CENTURY?"

It's not too early to begin planning your storage and feeding systems for the year 2000 and beyond.

As margins narrow, dairymen need to invest in efficiency: this can have as great an influence on PROFIT as milk price changes.

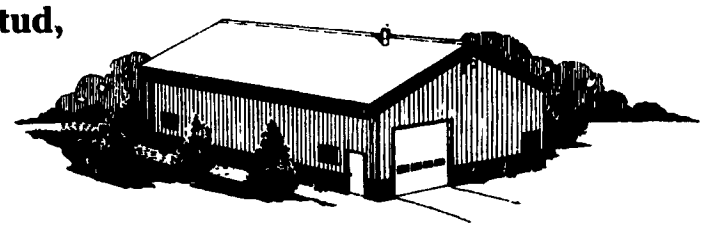
The Building you want.
The Lease you need.

Whether your new farm or commercial building is of pole, timber column, stud, steel or block construction; choose Telmark lease financing.



Telmark has been leasing equipment for over 30 years. Did you know that we've been leasing new buildings for that long too? Consider the features:

- Tax deductibility and accelerated write-offs: Lease payments are income tax deductible over the term of the lease compared to 20-year depreciation of farm buildings and 39-year depreciation of commercial buildings. Could reduce tax liability this year.
- Low upfront costs: Beginning costs may be as little as one monthly lease payment.
- Flexible lease term: Building lease terms start aggressively at five years but may be as long as ten, twelve, or fifteen years.
- Customized payment schedules: Lease payment schedules match your cash flow. Payment options include monthly, quarterly, annually, as well as, skip or specially designed seasonal payments.

How do you start leasing a building from Telmark? Talk with a qualified builder to determine your needs and building cost. And call your Telmark representative:

You may pay less for some dairy farm equipment... but it can cost you more!

Equipment cost is not the only cost of cooling milk

Example	Mueller	Competition
Cost of equipment	$31,000	$26,000
Cost of electricity @ .08 kW for 12,000 lbs milk/day for 10 years	$17,550	$22,850
Total operating cost for ten years	$48,550	$50,850
Savings	$ 2,300

Frost Heaving Severely Damages Ohio Alfalfa

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Severe cases of frost heaving damaged many Ohio alfalfa fields during the winter, and in some cases completely destroyed plant stands, said an Ohio State University forage agronomist.

Mark Sulc said that some fields have plant crowns as much as 4 to 6 inches above the ground, with taproots completely broken. The hardest hit were stands newly seeded last August, although damage also occurred in established stands.

"It appears that most areas of the state suffered from some heaving," Sulc said. "The degree of heaving varies from field to field, and even varies within individual fields."

Sulc said that frost heaving also damaged red clover and birdsfoot trefoil in some areas.

The chief cause appeared to be high levels of soil moisture freezing throughout the winterwhich expanded the ground and uplifted plants, Sulc said. Upon thawing, the soils subsided to original levels, leaving plant crowns exposed and root systems severed.

In many cases, heaving severed the main taproot 6-18 inches below the surface.

Frost heaving appeared to be a winter-long process, followed with multiple freeze-thaw cycles of warm days and cold nights into the spring, Sulc said. The latter cycles raised plants even higher above the ground, severely damaging plants not anchored into the soil.

Although silty, poorly-drained soils are most susceptible to frost heaving, Sulc even saw damage in tiled fields. Damage also varied within individual fields depending on snow cover, residue cover and plant vigor.

"However, the overriding factor appeared to be soil moisture content, because good residue cover did not reduce heaving in wetter portions of fields," Sulc said.

Sulc said farmers need to walk their fields because damage is often not visible from the road. Farmers should evaluate damage depending on whether the field was newly seeded last August or if it was an established stand.

In any case, farmers should not roll or cultipack soils of newly seeded or established stands. Those practices will cause more harm than good, he said.

Fields that have heaved one-half inch or less should recover whether they were newly seeded last August or were older, established stands. Continue to monitor these fields for recovery through spring. Delaying harvest may help with recovery in both cases.

Newly seeded fields with more serious damage can be reseeded this spring. Autotoxicity, which occurs when older stands release compounds toxic to new seedlings, will not be a problem in these fields. To save time and money, use no-till practices to re-establish stands this spring, Sulc said.

Fine-Tune Vitamin Levels To Boost Profits

PRINCETON, N.J. — Whether you're talking about a sow's reproductive performance or her pigs' lean growth potential, the pork industry's quest for greater efficiency is forcing some major reconsiderations of vitamin requirements.

As producers push to get more, faster, for less, researchers are asking whether current vitamin feeding levels allow producers to recoup all their investment in better genetics and more efficient production practices.

Meanwhile, the National Research Council (NRC) continues work on updating its published vitamin requirement levels, which offer benchmark minimums for the industry.

The issue is neither small or simple. Vitamins may account for only 0.1 percent of a typical ration's weight, but they're involved in 100 percent of the metabolic processes that enable the animal to turn feed into muscle, fat, skin, and bone. Short-change an animal on some of the B vitamins, for instance, and it won't matter how well you balance the rest of the ration; you'll have less than optimum growth.

"Basically, you can think of vitamins as the spark plugs of metabolism," said Dr. Merlin Lindemann, at the Universitiy of Kentucky. "You get your energy from a variety of grains and other feedstuffs, protein supplies and so forth, but you need the vitamins to run the engine."

Further complicating the issue, scientists are still refining their understanding of vitamins — such as the exact role of the antioxidant vitamins in the immune response. At the same time, advances at the farm level can affect the animals' vitamin needs. So determining the dietary vitamin levels that permit optimum health and productivity can present the challenge of shooting at a moving target.

In fact, the NRC last revised its swine requirements in 1988, so even the most recent research underlying its present requirements is about 10 years old. "There are indications that in some cases, because of changes since then, the current NRC estimates for some vitamins are substantially below what may now be needed in certain management systems," said Iowa State University's Dr. Tim Stahly.

One example of the reevaluation now taking place: a study by Stahly and other Iowa State researchers of five B vitamins that are closely linked to muscle development. The researchers found that both rate of gain and feed efficiency didn't peak until vitamin levels reached three to five time the NRC requirements. And the greater needs occurred in pigs from a modern genotype with high lean growth potential.

Similarly, recent studies by Ohio State University researchers found that average litter size increased by one pig and incidence of mastitis-metritis-agalactia (MMA) fell significantly when sow rations included three to four times the NRC recommended level for vitamin E.

Such discrepancies between optimum levels and NRC requirements can also be traced to the NRC's goals when it sets requirements, noted Lindemann. "The NRC establishes nutrient requirement levels to avoid deficiency signs — the requirements are meant to be a floor," he said. "They don't necessarily address all the situations that exist out there on hog operations — like genotypes and environment and feedstuffs. It would be too daunting a task to define nutrient levels for all those situations."

AS for the payback from accurately gauging animals' needs, Lindemann likens vitamin nutrition to fertilizing corn. "Let's say you put $10 of nitrogen on your corn and get a $30 yield response. Perhaps the next $10 of fertilizer would only give $20 of increased yield. It's not as great a response as the first unit of addition, but it's certainly still avery good response.

"You don't have to fertilize your fields in the first place. But if you don't, you're never going to be one of the top producers. In fact, you're not going to be in business long. Similarly with vitamins. The animal can probably survive without supplementation, but you won't maximize economic performance. And while the first unit of addition will give the greatest response, there are still very economical returns to additional supplementation.

"So the question becomes, At what level do I supplement? Do I want to minimize my costs and maybe take a chance with performance? Or do I want to look at all the informaiton and perhaps supplement at a more optimal level that is going to maximize profits?"

Any number of operation-specific factors can determine what that optimum level is, Lindemann noted. "Your feeding program, for one," he said. "Lower total feed intake might necessitate higher rates of supplementation to keep vitamin intake constant. Or if you have added fat in your diet, it might require a bit extra of certain vitamins. Stress can affect vitamin needs — the studies that the NRC relies on often have a relatively low stocking density, and hence a minimum amount of stress. Feedstuffs can vary greatly in vitamin content and how much is available to the animal."

Indeed, for all the rethinking of vitamin supplementation levels that will help optimize animal performance and producer profits, one thing has remained constant: the importance of adapting general advice on supplementation to the particulars of the farm. "Once you look at the NRC floor," Lindemann said, "you need to look at your own operation's profile, factor in a margin of error and then make your decision with input from your nutritionist and feed supplier."

Lower Rates, New Health Insurance Option For Members

GETTYSBURG (Adams Co.) — The Pennsylvania Farm Bureau board of directors has approved changes which will give members more choices in group health insurance from Pennsylvania Farm Bureau and will lower rates.

"Theh good news is that premium rates will be coming down for all members under PFB's Blue Cross, Blue Shield group coverage starting July 1," said PFB Administrative Secretary Lou Sallie. "Even better news is that PFB will be offering members a new health care option, a point of service managed care product, with even lower rates and no medical underwriting."

Under the Point of Service program, a participating family will select their primary care physician from a network of eligible physicians who then serve as the focal point for all of the member's health care needs. The primary care physician provide the member's primary medical care, promotes the importance of preventive care and wellness, and guides the member through the health care delivery system by acting as the coordinator of specialty care whenever it is needed.

But unlike a Health Maintenance Organization (HMO), a participating family will be free to go to another doctor or specialist outside their primary care network and still receive reimbursement for a share of their costs. Under an HMO there is no insurance coverage for health care provided outside the organization. Point of service members who self-refer for health care services share more of the cost of that care through an annual deductible and coinsurance. Thye level of reimbursement for most covered services depends upon whether services were coordinated by the primary care physician or if the member self-referred to a provider of his or her own choice.

Rates for the new Point of Service program will be substantially lower than PFB's Group Blue Cross, Blue Shield Basic program — in fact, they will be lower than the rates for most HMOs. "Managed care plans have given insurers new ways to control costs and pass the savings on to users," explained Dave Fleming, PFB's director of health services. The new program will have an overlapping effect on PFB's Group Blue Cross, Blue Shield program, causing those premium rates to drop also, effective July 1.

Members will be happy to know that rate reductions for our Blue Cross Blue Shield Basic Coverage and 65 Special and the low rates for our new Point of Service option will be guarranteed for 18 months, until January 1998," Felming said.

Other benefits under the new Point of Service program include:

• A flat $10 charge for doctor's office visits. "this is especially beneficial for parents with young children who might be going to the doctor seveal times a year," Fleming said.

• Use of both PFB Group Blue Cross, Blue Shield prescription drug discount programs. The $18 mail-order National RX program for long-term prescription needs and the PAID Direct program for short-term needs will continue to be offered to both plans.

"The key to the Point of Service structure is a focus on preventative care and wellness," Fleming said. "Members who enroll are encouraged to maintain healthy lifestyles through education and health promotion programs."

Farm Bureau members will receive a letter from Capital Blue Cross later this month introducing the new program. Members will be able to call Pennsylvania Farm Bureau Health Services toll-free at (800) 522-2375 for additional information. Farm Bureau will also be holding district meetings to explain the program personally.

"We're asking members already enrolled in our Blue Cross, Blue Shield Group Program to evaluate the new program and the cost differences carefully before making a decision. Once you decide to switch to the Point of Service program your decision cannot be changed for two year."

Members already enrolled can switch during an open period from July 7 until the end of 1996.

Farm Bureau members who are not enrolled in PFB Blue Cross, Blue Shield can enroll in the Point of Service program anytime after July 1.

Those enrolled in PFB's 65-Special Group Insurance will not be eligible for the new program. "But they will see a slight decrease in their insurance premium which will also stay in effect for 18 months, and we expect to have a managed care program available for this group by next year," Fleming said.

The Point of Service program makes the first time PFB has had a dual option program for members since the Group Medical Insurance program was established in 1977. "Members are going to benefit by having a choice in their health care planning and being able to reduce their health insurance costs," Fleming said.

Reduce Nitrogen

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Research conducted at the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture may help swine producers cut down on the amount of nitrogen in hog waste.

"Nitrogen present in hog wastes applied to land can be a potential problem for swine operators because unless managed properly, it can enter water supplies, resulting in pollution of groundwater, lakes, and streams," said Gary Cromwell, animal scientist with the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture.

Cromwell said his research shows that the amount of nitrogen excreted by hogs can be reduced by feeding a lower level of protein, supplemented with amino acids, without sacrificing growth and performance.

"In one experiment, we fed finishing pigs a diet containing 12 percent protein — supplemented with .15 percent lysine — instead of the usual 14 percent protein. Pig growth was equal to that achieved with the higher protein diet. The amount of nitrogen present in urine and feces was reduced by 19 percent in the lower protein diet," Cromwell said.

In another study, Cromwell fed a diet with 10 percent protein and supplement the diet with lysine, threonine, tryptophan, and methionine. Rate of gain for the pigs fed the reduced-protein diet was comparable to those fed a high;er protein diet, but the amount of nitrogen excreted was reduced by 34 percent.

"Lysine is an amino acid that is one of the building blocks of protein. Threonine, Tryptophan, and methionine also are amino acids found in protein. By balancing the feedstuffs for amino acids, we were able to reduce significantly the amount of nitrogen excreted," he said.

Cromwell noted, however, that using the threonine and tryptophan-fortified diets was more expensive than simply feeding more soybean meal, the usual source of the protein.

"The lysine diet was no more expensive than conventional feeding programs. Before long, tryptophan and threonine should be available at prices that make these types of diets cost effective," he said.

S.I. FEEDERS

REBATE

$100 ON ALL ARROWFRONT® FEEDER WAGONS
$20 ON ALL BUNKS UNTIL* JUNE 30, 1996

The S.I. Feeder is designed to minimize feed loss. This is done with functional slant bars, low set design, proper pan depth, feed saving edges, and other concepts to reduce waste.

The S.I. Feeder Wagons have the versatility to feed any type of grain, forage, or even a total mixed ration. Four foot high inserts are options to increase load capacity and to control the downward flow of feed.

Get an S.I. Feeder now to get maximum efficiency of your quality feeds.

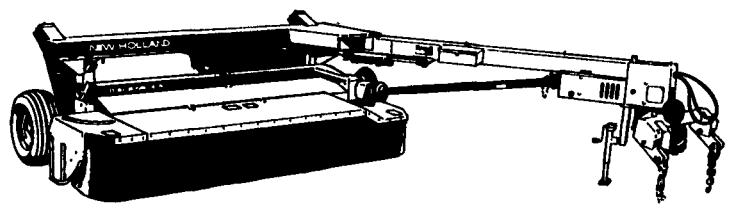
415 DISCBINE®



WIDE CUT-EVEN CONDITIONING

You'll love the wide-cutting performance of the Model 415 Discbine® disc mower-conditioner. Seven discs make an 11-1/2-foot cut through your toughest crops. And with the New Holland torsion-bar roll-pressure system, you get consistent conditioning even in uneven crop conditions. Plus, roll pressure decreases automatically to let slugs pass through.

Stop in and see the big performance of the "415".

With the ROLLANT 46 ROTO CUT, the incoming crop is sliced by the 14 serrated knives, spaced 2.75" apart across the width of the intake. The resulting sliced material can be compressed to a higher density and is much easier to feed out to livestock. CLASS ROLLANT round balers are a cost effective investment thanks to their output, reliability and ease of maintenance. Their versatility also helps to keep them in action for many months of the year.
